MARTIN LUTHER, Parody of First Psalm

14
 Women are hardly fit to treat on matters of theology. (Les femmes ne sont guères propres à traiter les matières de la théologie.)

15
 My theology, briefly, Is that the Universe
 Was Dictated But not Signed.

 Matter of the breviary, elementary theology.
 (Matière de brevière.)

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. II.

17
 So oft in theologic wars,
 The disputants, I ween,
 Rail on in utter ignorance

Of what each other mean,

And prate about an Elephant

Not one of them has seen!

J. G. Saxe, The Blind Men and the Elephant.

THIEVING

3 To rob even a corpse. (Τὸ κλέβειν καὶ νεκροὺς φέρειν.)
ARISTOTLE, Rhetoric. Bk. ii, ch. 6, sec. 5. Quoted as a proverb.

4 Every rascal is not a thief, but every thief is a rascal. (Οὐ γὰρ πᾶς πορνὸς κλέπτης, ἀλλ' ὁ κλέπτης πᾶς πορνός.)

ARISTOTLE, Rhetoric. Bk. ii, ch. 24, sec. 5.

All are not thieves that dogs bark at.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 26.

5 Opportunity makes a thief.

FRANCIS BACON, Letter to the Earl of Essex.

If the thief has no opportunity, he thinks himself honorable.

The Talmud. See also under OPPORTUNITY.

6 To keep my hands from picking and stealing, and my tongue from evil speaking, lying, and slandering

Book of Common Prayer: Catechism.

7 'Twas a thief said the last kind word to Christ:
Christ took the kindness and forgave the theft.
BROWNING, Ring and the Book. Bk. vi, l. 869.

8 But for your petty, downright thievery,
We scorn it as we do board-wages.

BYRON, Werner. Act ii, sc. 1.

9 A thief myself, I know the tracks of a thief.
(Φυρὸς ὁ χνία φύει ἱκανός.)

CALLIMACHUS, Epigrams. No. 44.

10 In a very plain sense the proverb says, Call one a thief and he will steal.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. ii, ch. 1.

11 Thieves are never rogues among themselves.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 60.

Even thieves have a code of laws to observe and obey. (Quin etiam leges latronum esse dicuntur, quibus parent, quas observant.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. ii, ch. 11, sec. 40.

What thieves make a point of honour of; I mean that of being honest to one another.

DEFOE, Colonel Jack. Ch. 1.

There is honour among thieves.

SCOTT, Redgauntlet. Ch. 10.

A plague upon it when thieves cannot be true one to another!

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 29.

ZENO. (PLUTARCH, Apophthegms.)

13 How great his theft who robs himself!

NATHANIEL COTTON, Pleasure.

In labor as in life there can be no cheating. The thief steals from himself.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Compensation.

14 And he that stole has learn'd to steal no more.
COWPER, Hope, l. 523.

He that is once a thief is ever more in danger.

LANGLAND, Piers Plowman. PASSUS xv, l. 146.

15 When false thieves fall out true men come to their own.

JOHN DAY, Blind Beggar. Act iv, sc. 1. (1600)

When knaves fall out, honest men come by their own.

SAMUEL PALMER, Essays on Proverbs, p. 327.

16 One thief knoweth another.

THOMAS DRAX, Bibliotheca Scholæ. Instruct.

A thief knows a thief, as a wolf knows a wolf.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 430.

16a When a felon's not engaged in his employment,

Or maturing his felonious little plans,

His capacity for innocent enjoyment

Is just as great as any honest man's.

W. S. GILBERT, The Pirates of Penzance. Act ii.

17 When it thunders the thief becomes honest.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. See also under DEVIL.

18 The Friar preached against stealing, and had a goose in his sleeve.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. See also

19 Change be no robbery.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 4. (1546)

Exchange is no robbery.

C. H. SPURGEON, Salt-cellar.

20 Robbers spring up by night to cut a man's throat. (Ut jugulent hominem, surgunt de nocte latrones.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epin. 2, l. 32.

21 If from my thousand pecks you steal but one,

My loss is small, but you're by sin undone.

(Nam de mille fabæ modis cum sutripis Dandum est, non lativus, mihi pacto lenius ipso.)
unum,

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, ep. 16, l. 55.

Easy it is

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know.

SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus. Act II, sc. 1, 86.

Now Barabbas was a robber.

New Testament: John, xviii, 40.

Now Barabbas was a publisher.

THOMAS CAMPBELL. "It was Thomas Campbell who wrote 'Now Barabbas was a publisher,' whether in a Bible or otherwise is not authentically recorded, and forwarded it to a friend; but Mr. Murray was not the publisher to whom it referred, nor was Lord Byron, as has been so frequently stated, the author of the joke."—SAMUEL SMILES, Memoirs and Correspondence of John Murray. Vol. i, p. 336. See also WHITE, Memoir of William Henemann, p. 44.

2 No one shall be a thief with me as his helper. (Me nemo ministro Fur erit.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. iii, l. 46.

3 What a liberal confounding of those pedantic distinctions of meum and tuum!

LAMB, Essays of Elia: The Two Races of Men.

4 All men love to appropriate to themselves the belongings of others; it is a universal desire; only the manner of doing it differs. (Tous les hommes aiment à s'approprier le bien d'autrui; c'est un sentiment général; la manière seule de le faire en est différente.)

LE SAGE, Gil Blas. Bk. i, ch. 5.

5 In vain we call old notions fudge,

And bend our conscience to our dealing;

The Ten Commandments will not budge,

And stealing will continue stealing.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, International Copyright. Adopted as motto by the American Copyright League. Written 20 Nov., 1885.

6 And fell among thieves.

New Testament: Luke, x, 30.

7 My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves.

New Testament: Matthew, xxi, 13; Mark, xi, 17; Luke, xix, 46.

8 If the Goodman of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched.

New Testament: Matthew, xxiv, 43.

9 Both are thieves, the receiver as well as the stealer. (Appréhens chéris, et à l'apprentis, et à l'adultère.)

PROVERBS, Sonsiville. (Gronnam, Flarilegium.)

The receiver is bad as the thief.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

10 Great thieves hang little ones.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 170.

Thieves at home must hang; but he that puts into his overgorg'd and bloated purse The wealth of Indian provinces, escapes.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. i, l. 736.

We hang little thieves and take off our hats to great ones. (Kleine Diebe hangt man, vor grossen zieht man den Hut ab.)

UNKNOWN A German proverb

11 Hang a thief when he's young and he'll no steal when he's old.

ANDREW HENDERSON, Scottish Proverbs.

12 A sacrilegious thief.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act v, sc. 5, l. 220.

A cutpurse of the empire.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 99.

13 Rob me the exchequer.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 205.

14 Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage

And purchase friends and give to courtesans, Still reveling like lords till all be gone; While as the silly owner of the goods Weeps over them and wrings his hapless hands.

SHAKESPEARE, 11 Henry VI. Act i, sc. 1, l. 222.

It is when pirates count their booty that they become mere thieves

BOLITHO, Twelve Against the Gods: Intro, p. 8.

They inwardly resolved that so long as they remained in the business their piracies should not again be sullied with the crime of stealing.

MARK TWAIN, Tom Sawyer. Ch. 13.

15 Every true man's apparel fits your thief.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, iv, 2, 46.

16 "Convey," the wise it call. "Steal!" foh! a fico for the phrase!

SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, i, 3, 32.

O, good! convey? conveyors are you all,

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 317.

17 The most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is and steal out of your company.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, iii, 3, 61.

18 Flat burglary as ever was committed.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, iv, 2, 52.

19 The robb'd that smiles steals something from the thief

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 3, l. 203.

He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stol'n, Let him not know 't, and he's not robb'd at all.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iii, sc. 3, l. 242.

What loss seeks he that wots not what he loses?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives. Act I, sc. 1.

1 I'll example you with thievery:

The sun 's a thief, and with his great attraction

Robs the vast sea: the moon 's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
The sea 's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears: the earth 's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From general excrement: each thing 's a thief.
SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens, iv, 3, 438.

2 O, theft most base,
That we have stol'n what we do fear to keep!

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, ii, 2, 92.
3 Save a thief from the gallows and he will cut your throat.

WILLIAM CAMDEN, Remains, 311. (1614)
Quoted by SMOLLETT, Humphrey Clinker.
Save a thief from the gallows and he will help to hang you.

ARTHUR GOLDING, Calvin on Deuteronomy.
(1583) There are several other variations.
This is true, by all hallows,
Deliver a thief from the gallows,
And he shall wait thee to rob or slay.

UNKNOWN, Sir Bevis of Hamtoun, l. 969. (14th century.)

Anoint a scoundrel and he will wound you;
wound him and he will anoint you.
RABELAIS, Works. Bk. I, ch. 32.

4 Pickpockets, each hand lusting for all that is not its own.

TENNYSON, Maud. Pt. i, sec. 1, st. 6.

5 Why should I deprive my neighbour
Of his goods against his will?

Hands were made for honest labour,
Not to plunder or to steal.

ISAAC WATTS, The Thief.

6 He that prigs what isn't his'n,
When he's cotched 'll go to prison.

"HOPPY" WEN. (On the authority of Lord William Lennox.)

THIRST

7 The panting thirst that scorches in the breath
Of those that die the soldier's fiery death.

BYRON, Lara. Canto ii, st. 16.

8 The fountains themselves are athirst. (Fontes ipsi sitiunt.)

CICERO, Epistolas ad Quintum Fratrem. Bk. iii,
ch. i, sec. 4.

9 Hunger is bitter, but the worst
Of human pangs, (the most accursed
Of Want's fell scorpions, is Thirst.
ELIZA COOK, Melode.

10 Go not to the pot for every thirst.

GEORGE HARRERT, Jocunde Prudentium. The French say, "Qui est maître de sa soif est maître de sa santé" (He who is master of his thirst is master of his health).

11 And pines with thirst amidst a sea of waves.
HOMER, The Odyssey. Bk. xi, l. 722. (Pope, tr.)

There, with water everywhere, dry thirst burns the throat (Illi inter aquas urit sitis arida fauces.)

PETRONIUS, Fragmenta. No. 87.

Water, water, every where,
And all the boards did shrink;
Water, water, every where,
Nor any drop to drink.

S. T. COLERIDGE, The Ancient Mariner. Pt. II,
st. 9. Often incorrectly quoted, "And not a drop to drink."

12 Tantalus, thirsty wretch, catches at the streams that fly from his lips. (Tantalus a labris sitiens fugientia captat Flumina.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 1, l. 69.

He [Tantalus] seeks water in the midst of water.
(Querit aquas in aquis.)

OWEN, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 2, l. 43.

No water is obtainable to thee, Tantalus. (Tibi Tantale, nihil Deprenduntur aquae.)

OWEN, Metamorphoses. Bk. iv, l. 458.

13 I drank at every vine.
The last was like the first.

I came upon no wine
So wonderful as thirst.
EDNA ST. VINCENT MILAY, Feast.

14 Whenever I see thee thirst, cup in hand, I apply it to my lips more for thy sake than for drinking.

PHILOSTRATUS, Letters. No. 24.

The thirst that from the soul doth rise,
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.
BEN JONSON, To Celia.

15 It's a miserable business, waiting till thirst has you by the throat before you dig the well.
(Miserum est opus, Igitur demum fodere puteam, ubi sitis fauces tenet.)

PLAUTUS, Mosellensis, l. 379. (Act II, sc. 1.)

16 When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act V, sc.
2, l. 372.

17 The thirsty drink in silence. (Οἱ διψῶντες σιωπῇ πινούσι.)

UNKNOWN. A Greek proverb.

THOREAU, HENRY DAVID

18 Masterful in genius was he, and unique,
Patient, sagacious, tender, frolicsome—

This Concord Pan.

AMORE BROWN ALCOTT, Thoreau.

We, sighing, said, "Our Pan is dead;
His pipe hangs mute beside the river."
Then from the flute untouched by hands,
There came a low, harmonious breath:
"For such as he there is no death;
His life the eternal life commands."
LOUISA MAY ALCOTT, Thoreau's Flute.

1 Thoreau's quality is very penetrating and contagious; reading him is like eating onions—one must look out or the flavor will reach his own page.

JOHN BURROUGHS, Journal, 1878.

2 [Thoreau's] father was a manufacturer of lead-pencils, and Henry applied himself for a time to this craft, believing he could make a better pencil than was then in use. After completing his experiments, he exhibited his work to chemists and artists in Boston, and having obtained their certificates to its excellence and to its equality with the best London manufacture, he returned home contented. His friends congratulated him that he had now opened his way to fortune. But he replied that he should never make another pencil. "Why should I? I would not do again what I have done once."

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Studies: Thoreau.

He was a protestant d'entrance, and few lives contain so many renunciations. He was bred to no profession; he never married; he lived alone; he never went to church; he never voted; he refused to pay a tax to the State; he ate no flesh, he drank no wine, he never knew the use of tobacco; and, though a naturalist, he used neither trap nor gun. He chose, wisely no doubt for himself, to be the bachelor of thought and Nature.

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Sketches: Thoreau.

3 I love Henry, but I cannot like him; and as for taking his arm, I should as soon think of taking the arm of an elm-tree.

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Sketches: Thoreau. Quoting a friend of Thoreau.

4 Whatever question there may be of his talent, there can be none, I think, of his genius. It was a slim and crooked one, but it was eminently personal. He was imperfect, unfinished, inartistic; he was worse than provincial—he was parochial.

HENRY JAMES, Hawthorne. Ch. iv, p. 94. (Referring to Thoreau.)

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto i, st. 64.

9 It is the Thought of man; the true thaumaturgic virtue; by which man works all things whatsoever. All that he does, and brings to pass, is the vesture of a Thought.

CARLYLE, On Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Man of Letters.

10 One thought includes all thought, in the sense that a grain of sand includes the universe.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Additional Table Talk: Thought.

11 Our thought is the key which unlocks the doors of the world. There is something in us which corresponds to that which is around us, beneath us, and above us.

SAMUEL MCCORD CROTHERS. (NEWTON, My Idea of God, p. 211.)

12 The art of meditation may be exercised at all hours, and in all places; and men of genius, in their walks, at table, and amidst assemblies, turning the eye of the mind inwards, can form an artificial solitude; retired amidst a crowd, calm amidst distraction, and wise amidst folly.

ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character. Ch. 11.

13 Man carries the world in his head, the whole astronomy and chemistry suspended in a thought.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Nature.

Thought makes everything fit for use. The vocabulary of an omniscient man would embrace words and images excluded from polite conversation.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

14 Nothing in the universe so solid as a thought.
EMERSON, Journals, 1864.

As certainly as water falls in rain on the tops of mountains and runs down into valleys, plains and pits, so does thought fall first on the best minds, and run down, from class to class, until it reaches the masses, and works revolutions.

EMERSON, Lectures and Biographical Sketches: The Man of Letters.

1 A rush of thoughts is the only conceivable prosperity that can come to us.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Inspiration.

It takes a great deal of elevation of thought to produce a very little elevation of life.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. IV, p. 441.

2 The senses collect the surface facts of matter. . . . It was sensation; when memory came, it was experience; when mind acted, it was knowledge; when mind acted on it as knowledge, it was thought.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Shakespeare.

4 Thought, the gaseous ashes of burned-out thinking, the excretion of mental respiration.

O. W. HOLMES, The Professor at the Breakfast-Table Ch. 1.

5 Thinkers help other people to think, for they formulate what others are thinking. No person writes or thinks alone—thought is in the air, but its expression is necessary to create a tangible Spirit of the Times.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Pig-Pen Pele: The Bee.

6 In the sunshine, by the shady verge of woods, by the sweet waters where the wild dove sips, there alone will thought be found.

RICHARD JEFFERIES, Pigeons at the British Museum.

If any imagine they will find thought in many books, certainly they will be disappointed. Thought dwells by the stream and the sea, by the hill and in the woodland, in the sunlight and free wind.

RICHARD JEFFERIES, Pigeons at the British Museum.

Thought can wing its way

Swifter than lightning-flashes or the beam

That hastens on the pinions of the morn.

JAMES GATES PIERCE, Sonnet

Thought hath good legs.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

As thought by thought is piled, till some great truth

Is loosened, and the nations echo round,

Shaken to their roots: as do the mountains

now.

SHELLEY, Prometheus Unbound. Act II, sc. 3, 40

Thoughts are mightier than strength of hand.

SOPHOCLES, Fragment. No. 584.

But thought and faith are mightier things than time

Can wrong,

Made splendid once with speech, or made sublime

By song.

eventualment of all other things is the arrival of a Thinker in the world.

CHARLES HAYES, And Here I Stand. Lecture 1.

Beware when the great God lets loose a thinker on this planet.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series. Circular.

Perhaps 'tis pretty to force together
Thoughts so all unlike each other;
To mutter and mock a broken charm,
To dally with wrong that does no harm.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Christabel. Pt. II, l. 666.

In the book of poetry are three hundred pieces, but the design of them all may be embraced in that one sentence, "Have no depraved thoughts."

CONFUCIUS, Analects.

I pray thee, O God, that I may be beautiful

And in no worldly suit would he be moved,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, Act III, sc. 7, l. 62.

Happy the heart that keeps its twilight hour,
And, in the depths of heavenly peace reclined,
Loves to commune with thoughts of tender power,—

Thoughts that ascend, like angels beautiful,
A shining Jacob's-ladder of the mind!

PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE, Sonnets No. 10.

12. If I could think how these my thoughts to leave,
Or thinking still, my thoughts might have good end;

If rebel sense would reason's law receive,
Or reason foil'd would not in vain contend;
Then might I think what thoughts were best to think,
Then might I wisely swim, or gladly sink.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Sonnet.

13. Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O Sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

THRUSH

7 Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge

Leans to the field and scatters on the clover
 Blossoms and dewdrops—at the bent spray's edge—

That's the wise thrush: he sings each song twice over

Lest you should think he never could recapture
 The first fine careless rapture!

R. BROWNING, Home Thoughts from Abroad.

8 No voice awoke. Dwelling sedate, apart,
 Only the thrush, the thrush that never spoke,
 Sang from her bursting heart.

LAURA BAKER, The Thrush.

9 God's poet, hid in foliage green,
 Sing's endless songs, himself unseen;
 Right seldom come his silent times.

Linger, ye summer hours, serene!
 Sing on, dear Thrush, amid the limes!

MORTIMER COLLINS, My Thrush.

10 Through the wood's full strains I hear
 Thy monotone deep and clear,
 Like a sound amid sounds most fine.

DINAH M. M. CHALK, A Rhymer About Birds.

11 The full notes clearer grow;
 Hark, what a torrent gush!

They pour, they overflow—
 Sing on, sing on, O thrush!

ALFRED DOUGLAS, Soliloquy of the Thrush.

12 An aged thrush, frail, gaunt, and small,
 In blast-beruffled plumage,

Had chosen thus to fling his soul
 Upon the growing gloom. . . .

And I could think there trembled through
 His happy good-night air

Some blest Hope, whereof he knew
 And I was unaware.

THOMAS HARDY, The Darkling Thrush.

13 Full lasting is the song, though he,
 The singer, passes: lasting too,

For souls not lent in usury,
 The rapture of the forward view.

GEORGE MEREDITH, The Thrush in February.

14 A voice peals in this end of night
 A phrase of notes resembling stars,

Single and spiritual notes of light.
 What call they at my window-bars?

The South, the past, the day to be,

An ancient infelicity.

ALICE MEYNELL, A Thrush Before Dawn.

15 O thrush, your song is passing sweet,
 But never a song that you have sung

Is half so sweet as thrushes sang
 When my dear love and I were young.

 And little brown-frocked brother
 Of the loved Assisian!

T. A. DALY, To a Thrush.

17 At earliest dawn, his thrilling pipe was heard;
 And, when the light of evening died away,

That blithe and indefatigable bird
 Still his redundant song of joy and love preferred.

ROBERT SOUTHEY, A Tale of Paraguay: Dedication. St. 4.

18 Sing, sweet thrushes, forth and sing!
 Meet the moon upon the lea.

THOMAS TON STODGART, The Angler's Trysting-Tree.

19 Hush! With sudden gush
 As from a fountain sings in yonder bush
 The Hermit-Thrush.

JOHN BANISTER TARR, Overflow.

20 Blow softly, thrush, upon the hush
 That makes the least leaf loud,

Blow, wild of heart, ~~some~~ ^{some} apart
 From all the vocal crowd,

Apart, remote, a spirit note
That dances meltingly aloft,
Blow faintly, thrush!
JOSEPH RUSSELL TAYLOR, Blow Softly, Thrush.

When rosy plumelets tuft the larch,
And rarely pipes the mounted thrush.
TENNYSON, In Memoriam. Pt. xci.

Oh, hark to the brown thrush! hear how he sings!

How he pours the dear pain of his gladness!
What a gush! and from out what golden springs!

What a rage of how sweet madness!
DAVID ATWOOD WASSON, Joy-Month.

And hark! how blithe the throble sings!
He, too, is no mean preacher:
Come forth into the light of things,
Let Nature be your teacher.

Time which is the author of authors.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. I.

Time is the greatest innovator.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Innovations.

It were good therefore, that men in their innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees scarce to be perceived.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Innovations

Wherever anything lives, there is, open somewhere, a register in which time is being inscribed.

HERNÉ BRANSON, Creative Evolution. Ch. 1.

That great mystery of TIME, were there no other; the immutable, silent, never-resting thing called Time, rolling, rushing on, swift, silent, like an all-embracing ocean-tide, on which we and all the Universe swim like exhalations, like apparitions which are, and then are not: this is forever very literally a miracle; a thing to strike us dumb,—for we have no word to speak about it.

My inheritance how wide and fair:
 Time is my estate; to Time I'm heir.
 (Mein Vermächtniss, wie herrlich weit und breit!
 Die Zeit ist mein Vermächtniss, mein Acker ist die Zeit.)

GOETHE, Wühelm Meister's Travels. Used as motto by Carlyle for Sartor Resartus.

16 Time is . . . Time was . . . Time is past.
 ROBERT GREENE, *The Honourable Historie of
 Friar Bacon*, xi, 55 (1589)

I must speak to you as Friar Bacon's headspake, . . .
 Time is, and then Time was, and Time would never be.

25 Be ruled by time, the wisest counsellor of all.
 (Ἐκείδωκεν ἀπαλὸς χρόνος.)
 PRUTCHER. (PLUTARCH, Alexander. Ch. 28, sec. 2.)

How goes the enemy?

RICHARD REXFORD, The Will. Act I, sc. 1.
Said by Mr. Ennui, the "time-killer."

George: How goes the enemy?

Leach: What can he mean?

Festus: He asks the hour.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: A Large Party.

Who knows what may be slumbering in the background of time! (O, wer weiss Was in der Zeiten Hintergründe schlummert.)

SCHILLER, Don Carlos. Act I, sc. 1, l. 44.

SENECA, De Ira. Bk. iii, sec. 28.

Time elaborately thrown away.

YOUNG, The Last Day. Bk. I, l. 206.

Nothing is ours except time. (Omnia aliena sunt, tempus tantum nostrum est.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucilium. Epist. I, sec. 3.

Thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act v, sc. 1, l. 383.

Nick of Time!

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, The Goblins. Act v.

I'm just come in the nick!

SHAKESPEARE, The Rivals. Act iv, sc. 3.

I see that time divided is never long, and that regularity abridges all things.

MADAME DE STAËL, (STEVENS, Life of Madame de Staël. Ch. 38.)

To wind the mighty secrets of the past, And turn the key of time.

HENRY KIRKE WHITE, Time, l. 249. See also under PAST.

Delivered from the galling yoke of time.

WORDSWORTH, Laodamia, l. 161. This line appeared in the editions of 1815 and 1820, but not in later ones.

The unimaginable touch of Time.

WORDSWORTH, Sonnet: Musabillity.

III—Time: A Time for All Things

A time to love, and a time to wed, and a time to seek rest. (Ἄνθρωπος ἔστιν ὁπότε καὶ γάμος, ὁπότε καὶ ἀνάπαυσις.)

DIODORUS, (Greek Anthology. Bk. x, epig. 38.)

Though credited to Diodorus in the Anthology, this line was really spoken by Timon of Sicily, a Stoic philosopher who deserted to the Epicureans in his old age. It was preceded by the punning line, "Now when it is time for him to set, he begins to seek pleasure." (Ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ὅταν ἀποβῇ, ἀρχὴν αἰσχρολογίας.)

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:

A time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

A time to kill, and a time to heal, a time to break down, and a time to build up;

A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mow, and a time to dance; . . .

A time to get, and a time to lose, a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

A time to rend, and a time to sew; a time to keep silence, and a time to speak;

A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace.

Old Testament. Ecclesiastes, iii, 1-8.

Of a Monday I drive the coach, of a Tuesday I drive the plough, on Wednesday I follow the hounds, a Thursday I dun the tenants, on Friday I go to market, on Saturday I draw warrants, and a Sunday I draw beer

FARQUHAR, The Beaux' Stratagem. Act iii, sc. 3.

For holy offices I have a time; a time To think upon the part of business which I bear i' the state, and nature does require Her times of preservation

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 144.

But all thing hath time.

WILLIAM LANGLEND, Richard the Redeless. Pt. iii, l. 278. (c. 1399)

Everything has time.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, All Fools. Act v, sc. 2.

Everything hath its time, and that time must be watch'd.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No 1466.

There's a time for all things.

SHAKESPEARE, The Comedy of Errors. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 65.

There is a time for some things, and a time for all things; a time for great things and a time for small things.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote, Pt. ii, ch. 35.

IV—Time: A River

Time's waters will not ebb nor stay.

JOHN KEBLE, Christian Year: First Sunday after Christmas.

Time is a river of passing events, aye, a rushing torrent. (Ποταμός τις ἐκ τῶν ῥυακίων καὶ ποταμὸς βίαιος ὁ αἶψος.)

MARCUS AURELIUS, Meditations. Bk. iv, sec. 43.

Time is a flowing river. Happy those who allow themselves to be carried, unresisting, with the current. They float through easy days. They live, unquestioning, in the moment.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Where the Blue Begins, p. 81.

The stream of time glides smoothly on and is past before we know. (Labitur occulte fallitque, volubilis ætas.)

ORIGEN, Comment. Bk. i, clog. 2, l. 49.

Time glides by with constant movement, not unlike a stream. For neither can a stream stay its course, nor can the fleeting hour. (Adsiduo labuntur tempora motu, Non secus ac flumen; neque enim consistere flumen Nec levis hora potest.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xv, l. 179.

1 A wonderful stream is the River Time,
As it runs through the realm of Tears,
With a faultless rhythm, and a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep, and a surge sublime,
As it blends with the Ocean of Years.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN TAYLOR, The Long Ago.

2 The forward-flowing tide of time.

TENNYSON, Recollections of the Arabian Nights, l. 4.

3 Time, like an ever-rolling stream,
Bears all its sons away;
They fly forgotten, as a dream
Dies at the opening day.

ISAAC WATTS, O God, Our Help in Ages Past.

V—Time and Truth

4 The inseparable propriety of time, which is ever more and more to disclose truth.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. II.

Time trieth truth in every doubt.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. II, ch. 5. (1546)

Time tries the truth in everything.

THOMAS TUSSEK, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry: Author's Epistle. Ch. 1.

5 Time stands with impartial law. (Æquo stat feedare tempus.)

MANTILIUS, Astronomica, III, 360.

Time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let Time try.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act IV, sc. 1, l. 203.

6 O Time! whose verdicts mock our own,
The only righteous judge art thou!

THOMAS WILLIAM PARSONS, On a Bust of Dante.

7 See to it lest you try aught to conceal:
Time sees and hears all, and will all reveal.

SOPHOCLES, Fragment. No. 280.

Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act I, sc. 1, l. 283.

Time and chance reveal all secrets.

MARY DE LA RIVIERE MANLEY, New Atlantis. Pt. II, l. 230.

8 The wisest thing is Time, for it brings everything to light. (Σοφίστατον χρόνος, ἀνεύθυνον γὰρ πάντα.)

THEALES. (DIOGENES LAËRTIUS, Thales. Bk. I, sec. 35.)

Time will bring to light whatever is hidden; it will cover up and conceal what is now shining in splendor. (Quidquid sub terra est, in apriculis proferet ætas; Defodiet conditque nitentia.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. I, ep. 6, l. 24.

VI—Time: Its Flight

9 Alas! how swift the moments fly!

How flash the years along!

Scarce here, yet gone already by,

The burden of a song.

See childhood, youth, and manhood pass,

And age with furrowed brow;

Time was—Time shall be—drain the glass—

But where in Time is now?

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, The Hour Glass.

10 For though we sleep or wake, or roam, or ride,
Aye fleets the time, it will no man abide.

CHAUCER, The Clerkes Tale, l. 118.

Bide for time who will, for time will no man bide.

JOHN SKELTON, Works. Vol. i, p. 137.

Time nor tide tarrieth no man.

ROBERT GREENE, Disputations, p. 22. (1592)

Time and tide stayeth for no man.

RICHARD BRATHWAIT, English Gentleman, p. 189. (1630)

For the next Inn he spurs amain,

In haste alights, and skuds away,

But time and tide for no man stay.

W. C. SOMERVILLE, Sweet-Scented Miser, l. 98.

Nae man can tether time or tide.

BURNS, Tam o' Shanter, l. 67.

12 Swift, speedy Time, feathered with flying hours.

SAMUEL DANIEL, Sonnets to DeHa. No. xxxix

Time is a feathered thing,

And, whilst I praise,

The sparkling of thy looks, and call them rays,

Takes wing.

JASPER MAYNE, Time.

13 Whether we wake or we sleep,

Whether we carol or weep,

The Sun with his Planets in chime,

Marketh the going of Time.

EDWARD FITZGERALD, Chronometers.

14 You may delay, but time will not.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1758.

15 Time flies over us, but leaves its shadow behind.

HAWTHORNE, The Marble Faun. Ch. 24.

1. What's the use of sighing?
Sorrow as you may,

Time is always flying—
Flying!—and dreading

Men to say him nay.

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY, Villanelle.

2. Thursday come, and the week is gone.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentium.

3. I made a posy, while the day ran by:
Here will I smell my remnant out, and tie
My life within this band.

But time did beckon to the flowers, and they
By noon most cunningly did steal away,
And wither'd in my hand.

GEORGE HERBERT, Life.

4. Time, you old gipsy man,
Will you not stay,

Put up your caravan
Just for one day?

RALPH HODGSON, Time, You Old Gipsy Man.

5. Alas, O Postumus, the years glide swiftly by!
No piety delays the wrinkles, nor advancing age,

Nor the invincible hand of Death.

(Eheu fugaces, Postume, Postume,

Labuntur anni, nec pietas moram

Rugis et instanti senectute

Adferet indomitable morti.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. II, ode 14, l. 1.

What Horace says in Eheu fugaces,

Anni labuntur, Postume, Postume!

Years glide away and are lost to me, lost to me!

R. H. BARNHAM, Epigram: Eheu Fugaces.

6. Even while we speak, envious Time has fled.
(Dum loquimur, fugerit invidia ætas.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. I, ode II, l. 7.

While I am speaking, the hour flies (Dum loquor, hora fugit)

OVID, Amores. Bk. I, eleg. 11, l. 15.

Time flies and draws us with it. The moment in which I am speaking is already far from me.

(Le temps fuit, et nous traîne avec soi:

Le moment où je parle est déjà loin de moi.)

BOULRAU, Épîtres. No. III, l. 47.

Even now, while I write, time steals on our youth,

And a moment's cut off from thy friendship and
truth.

JOHN HERVEY, To a Friend.

Just while we talk the jealous hours

Are bringing near the decease and down.

ALBERT FOX, JR., Time.

7. O for an engine to keep back all clocks.

RON JOWEN, The New Year. Act IV, sc. 3.

I never had I watch nor any other mode of keeping time in my possession, nor ever wish to have had time given to me.

8. The noiseless foot of Time steals swiftly by,
And, ere we dream of manhood, age is nigh!

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. ix, l. 182. (Gifford, tr.)

We are old, and on our quick'st decrees

The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time

Steals ere we can effect them.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well. Act

v, sc. 3, l. 39.

Nought treads so silent as the foot of Time.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. v, l. 497.

9. Time's horses gallop down the lessening hill.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, Time Flies.

10. Time! what an empty vapor 'tis!

And days, how swift they are.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Time.

11. But at my back I always hear

Time's winged chariot hurrying near,

ANDREW MARVELL, To His Coy Mistress.

12. However we pass Time, he passes still,

Passing away whatever the pastime,

And, whether we use him well or ill,

Some day he gives us the slip for the last time.

OWEN MEREDITH, The Dead Pope.

13. Ah, well! when time is flown, how it fled

It is better neither to ask nor tell.

Leave the dead moments to bury their dead.

OWEN MEREDITH, The Wanderer: Two Out of the Crowd. St. 17. See also under Past.

14. Time slips by, and we grow old with the silent years; there is no bride can curb the flying days. (Tempora labuntur, tacitisque senes-cimus annis, Et fugiunt freno non remorante dies.)

OVID, Fasts. Bk. vi, l. 771.

Motion the swiftness of time. We sit and we sleep, toiling or taking our delight, and time is ever advancing, bringing to each the end of life.

PALLADAS, (Greek Anthology. Bk. x, epig. 81.)

15. The happier the time, the more quickly it passes. (Tanto brevius erans quanto felicias tempus.)

14, xxx, 4.

16. The clock does not strike for the happy. (Die Uhr schlägt keinem Glücklichen.)

SCHILLER, Sturm und Drang. Act III, sc. 3.

- 1 Time, like a flurry of wild rain,
Shall drift across the darkened pane!
CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS, The Unsleeping.
- 2 Time flies on restless pinions—constant never.
Be constant—and thou chainest time forever.
SCHILLER, Epigram.
- 3 All past time is lost time; the very day which we are now spending is shared between ourselves and death. (Quicquid transit temporis, perit; hunc ipsum, quem agimus, diem cum morte dividimus.)
SENeca, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epist. xxiv, 20.
- 4 Infinitely swift is the flight of time, as they see who look back at it. (Infinita est velocitas temporis, quæ magis apparet respicientibus.)

Time's fatal wings do ever forward fly;
To every day we live, a day we die.
CAMPION, Divine and Moral Songs. No. 17.
Time, as he passes us, has a dove's wing,
Unsoil'd, and swift, and of a silken sound.
COWPER, The Task. Bk. iv, l. 211.
- 7 See the minutes, how they run,
How many make the hour full complete;
How many hours bring about the day;
How many days will finish up the year;
How many years a mortal man may live.
SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act ii, sc. 5, l. 25.
So minutes, hours, days, months, and years,
Pass'd over to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act ii, sc. 5, l. 38.
- 8 Time is like a fashionable host
That lightly shakes his parting guest by the head,
And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the corner: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing.
SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, Ill, 3, 165.

- 9 Too late I staid, forgive the crime,— Unheeded flew the hours;
How noiseless falls the foot of Time
That only treads on flow'rs! . . .
Ah! who to sober measurement
Time's happy swiftness brings,
When birds of Paradise have lent
Their plumage for his wings?
WILLIAM ROBERT SPENCER, To the Lady Arden
Hamilton.
- 10 Go to my love, where she is careless laid
Yet in her winter's bower, not well awake;
Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take.
SPENCER, Amoretti. Sonnet lxx. See also under

VII—Time: Its Delay

- 17 Time goes, you say? Ah no!
Alas, Time stays, we go.
AUSTIN DOUGLAS, The Paradox of Time.

1 One would think that time stood still, so slowly does it move. (Stare putes, adeo procedunt tempora tarde.)
OVID, Tristia. Bk. v, eleg. 10, l. 5.

2 The small intolerable drums
Of Time are like slow drops descending.
E. A. ROBINSON, The Poor Relation.

3 Threefold the stride of Time, from first to last:

Loitering slow, the Future creepeth—
Arrow-swift, the Present sweepeth—
And motionless forever stands the Past.
(Dreifach ist der Schritt der Zeit;
Zögernd kommt die Zukunft hergezogen,
Pfeilschnell ist das Jetzt entflohen,
Ewig still steht die Vergangenheit.)
SCHILLER, Sprüche des Confucius.

4 The lazy foot of Time.
SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 322.

5 Time travels in divers paces with divers persons. I'll tell you who Time ambles withal, who Time trots withal, who Time gallops withal, and who he stands still withal.
SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 326.

What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? Unless hours were cups of sack and minutes capons and clocks the tongues of bawds and dials the signs of leaping-houses and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffeta, I see no reason why thou shouldst be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.
SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act i, sc. 2, l. 6.

6 Time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop.
SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act v, sc. 4, l. 82.

Time goes on crutches till love have all his rites.

7 Time has fallen asleep in the afternoon sunshine.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp. Ch. 1.

8 For Time would, with us, 'stead of sand,
Put filings of steel in his glass,
To dry up the blots of his hand,
And spangle life's page as they pass.
HORACE AND JAMES SMITH, The Beautiful Incendiary. St. 12.

9 What a foolish thing is time! And how foolish is man, who would be as angry if time stopped, as if it passed!

SWIFT, Letter to Vanessa, 7 Aug., 1722.

Give me no changeless hours, for I know
Moments of earth are sweeter than they go.
HENRY WALKER, Moments.

VIII—Time: Its Value

10 The greatest sacrifice is the sacrifice of time.
ANTIPHON. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Antony.)

11 Time is the measure of business, as money is of wares.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Despatch.

Time, O my friend, is money! Time wasted can never conduce to money well managed.

BULWER-LYTTON, Caxtoniana. Essay 21.

Time is money.

BULWER-LYTTON, Money. Act iii, sc. 3.

Remember that time is money.

13 It is the wisest who grieve most at loss of time.
(Chè perder tempo a chi più sa più spiace.)

DANTE, Purgatorio. Canto iii, l. 78.

14 Dost thou love life? Then do not squander time, for that's the stuff life is made of.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1758.

15 Pick my left pocket of its silver dime,
But spare the right,—it holds my golden time!

O. W. HOLMES, A Rhymed Lesson, l. 324.

16 To the true teacher, time's hour-glass should still run gold-dust.

DOUGLAS JERROLD, Jerrold's Wit: Time.

17 Nothing is so dear and precious as time.

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. v, ch. 5.

18 Time is the one loan which even a grateful recipient cannot repay. (Qui tempus accepit, cum interum hoc unum est, quod ne gratus quidem potest reddere.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. 1, sec. 3.

19 Save your time. (Tempori parce.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. lxxviii, sec. 39. Quoted as an old saw.

20 Time is the most valuable thing a man can spend. (Συνεχέει το θάνατο πολυτιμότερον πράγμα είναι τον χρόνον.)

THEOPHRASTUS. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Theophrastus. Bk. v, sec. 40.)

An inch of time cannot be bought by an inch of gold. ('Tsun chin nan mai 'tsun kuang yin.)

UNKNOWN. A Chinese proverb.

IX—Time: Lost Time Never Returns

21 Well can Senek, and many a philosopher

Bewail time, more than gold in coffer.

"For loss of cattle may recovered be,

But loss of time shendeth us," quoth he.

It will not come again, withouten drede,

No more than will Malkin's maidenhead.

CHAUCEER, Introduction to the Man of Law's Prologue, l. 25. Shendeth: ruins. For "Malkin's maidenhead" see under MAID.

For time y-lost, this knowen ye,
By no way may recovered be.

CHAUCEER, The House of Fame. Bk. iii, l. 167.

For time y-lost may not recovered be.

CHAUCEER, Troilus and Criseyde. Bk. iv, l. 1283.

Men may recover loss of good,
But so wise man yet never stood
Which may recover time y-lore.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. iv, l. 1382. (c. 1390)

Time departed, again men may not call.

LYDOATE, Fall of Princes. Bk. iii, l. 2811 (1440)

I hope you employ your whole time, which few people do . . . a thing so precious as time, and so irrecoverable when lost.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 9 Dec., 1746.

Hours and days, and months and years go by, nor does past time ever return. (Horæ cedunt et dies et menses et anni, nec præteritum tempus unquam revertitur.)

CICERO, De Senectute. Ch. xix, sec. 69.

Neither will the wave which has passed be called back, nor can the hour which has gone return.
(Nec quæ præterit, iterum revocabitur unda, Nec quæterit, hora redire potest.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. iii, l. 63.

Remember that lost time does not return.
(Memento . . . perditum non redit tempus.)

À KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Pt. i, ch. 25.

Time flies away, and cannot be restored. (Fugit inreparabile tempus.)

VERGIL, Georgics. Bk. iii, l. 284.

Lost time is never found again.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1748.

Man cannot call the brimming instant back;
Time's an affair of instants spun to days;
If man must make an instant gold, or black,
Let him, he may, but Time must go his ways.
Life may be duller for an instant's blaze.
Life's an affair of instants spun to years,
Instants are only cause of all these tears.

JOHN MASEFIELD, The Widow in the Bye Street. Pt. v, st. 27.

Who can undo

What time hath done? who can win back the wind?

Beckon lost music from a broken lute?
Renew the redness of a last year's rose?
Or dig the sunken sunset from the deep?

OWEN MEREDITH, Ovid. Epoch ii, sc. 1.

Would'st thou live long? keep Time in high esteem:

Whom gone, if thou canst not recall, redeema.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Hieroglyphics of the Life of Man. Epig. 6.

Onward the chariot of the Untarrying moves;
Nor day divulges him, nor night conceals;
Thou hearest the echo of unreturning hooves
And thunder of irrevocable wheels.

Catch then, oh catch the transient hour;

Improve each moment as it flies!

Life's a short Summer, man a flower;

He dies—alas! how soon he dies!

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Winter: An Ode.

The Seconds that tick as the clock moves along
Are Privates who march with a spirit so strong.
The Minutes are Captains. The Hours of the day

Are Officers brave, who lead on to the fray.
So, remember, when tempted to loiter and dream

You've an army at hand; your command is supreme;

And question yourself, as it goes on review—
Has it helped in the fight with the best it could do?

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight,

Make me a child again just for to-night!

ELIZABETH AKERS ALLEN, Rock Me to Sleep.

Fraudulently claimed by Alexander M. W.
Ball. (See Stevenson, Famous Single Poems.)

Backward, flow backward, O tide of the years!
I am so weary of toil and of tears—
Toil without recompense, tears all in vain—
Take them and give me my childhood again!
I have grown weary of dust and decay,
Weary of flinging my soul-wealth away,
Weary of sowing for others to reap;
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

ELIZABETH AKERS ALLEN, Rock Me to Sleep.

Time, so complain'd of,
Who to no one man
Shows partiality,
Brings round to all men
Some undimmi'd hours.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Consolation, l. 71.

O Time! the beautifier of the dead,
Adorner of the ruin, comforter
And only healer when the heart hath bled—
Time! the corrector where our judgments err,
The test of truth, love,—sole philosopher,
For all beside are sophists, from thy thrift
Which never loses though it doth defer—
Time, the avenger! unto thee I lift
My hands, and eyes, and heart, and crave of thee a gift.

BYRON, Childs Harold. Canto iv, st. 130.

15 Mis-shapen Time, copesmate of ugly Night,
Swift subtle post, carrier of grisly care,
Eater of youth, false slave to false delight,
Base watch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's
snare;

Thou nursest all and murder'st all that are.

SHAKESPEARE, The Rape of Lucrece, l. 925.

Time's glory is to calm contending kings,
To unmask falsehood and bring truth to light,
To stamp the seal of time in aged things,
To wake the morn and sentinel the night,
To wrong the wronger till he render right,
To rub out proud buildings with thy hours,
And smear with dust their glittering golden

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles. Bk. ii, ep. 2, l. 72.

Even such is Time, that takes in trust
Our youth, our joys, our all we have,
And pays us but with earth and dust;
Who in the dark and silent grave,
When we have wander'd all our ways,
Shuts up the story of our days;
But from this earth, this grave, this dust,
My God shall raise me up, I trust.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, The Conclusion. Written the night before his death. Found in his Bible in the Gate-house at Westminster.

The rank is but the guinea's stamp, The Man's the gowd for a' that.

BURNS, For a' That and a' That.

Honours, like impressions upon coin, may give an ideal and local value to a bit of base metal; but gold and silver will pass all the world over without any other recommendation than their own weight.

LAURENCE STERNE, Tristram Shandy: Bk. IX, Dedication. The sentence which is said to have inspired Burns's lines.

15 To lead or brass, or some such bad Metal, a prince's stamp may add

That value, which it never had;

But to the pure refined ore

The stamp of kings imparts no more Worth than the metal held before.

By thee protected, and thy sister beer,
Poets rejoice, nor think the bailiff near.

ISAAC H. BROWN, The Oxford Sausage.

The man who smokes, thinks like a sage and acts like a Samaritan!

BULWER-LYTTON, Night and Morning. Bk. i,
ch. 6.

He who doth not smoke hath either known no great griefs, or refuseth himself the softest consolation, next to that which comes from heaven.

Bk. i, ch. 6

Tobacco, divine, rare, superexcellent tobacco, which goes far beyond all the panaceas, potable gold, and philosopher's stones, a sovereign remedy to all diseases; . . . but as it is commonly abused by most men, which take it as tinkers do ale, 'tis a plague, a mischief, a violent purger of goods, lands, health; hellish, devilish and damned tobacco, the ruin and overthrow of body and soul.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt.
ii, sec. iv, mem 2, subs. 1.

17
I have a liking old
For thee, though manifold

Stories, I know, are told,
Not to thy credit;

How one (or two at most)

Drops make a cat a ghost—

Useless, except to roast—

Doctors have said it. . . .

Cats may have had their goose

Cooked by tobacco juice;

Still why deny its use

Thoughtfully taken?

We're not as tabbies are;

Smith, take a fresh cigar!
Jones, the tobacco-jar!

Here's to thee, Bacon!

C. S. CALVERLEY, Ode to Tobacco.

1 I smoke like a furnace.

W. S. GILBERT, Trial by Jury.

A German, Who smoked like a chimney.

R. H. BARHAM, The Lay of St. Odille. St. 3.

2 What a blessing this smoking is! perhaps the greatest that we owe to the discovery of America.

HELPS, Friends in Council. Ser. ii, ch. 1.

3 Tobacco is a dirty weed: I like it.
It satisfies no normal need: I like it.

It makes you thin, it makes you lean,

It takes the hair right off your bean;

It's the worst darn stuff I've ever seen:

I like it.

GRAHAM HEMMINGER, Tobacco. (Penn State Froth, Nov., 1915, p. 19.)

4 When all things were made none was made better than this: to be a lone man's companion, a bachelor's friend, a hungry man's food, a sad man's cordial, a wakeful man's sleep, and a chilly man's fire, Sir; while for stanching of wounds, purging of rheum, and settling of the stomach, there's no herb like unto it under the canopy of heaven.

CHARLES KINGSLEY, Westward Ho. Ch. 7, second paragraph from end. Salvation Yeo's tribute to tobacco.

5 For I hate, yet love, thee so,
That, whichever thing I show,
The plain truth will seem to be
A constrain'd hyperbole,
And the passion to proceed

More from a mistress than a weed.

CHARLES LAMB, A Farewell to Tobacco, l. 11.

Thou in such a cloud dost bind us,
That our worst foes cannot find us,
And ill fortune, that would thwart us,
Shoots at rovers, shooting at us;
While each man, through thy height'ning steam,
Does like a smoking Etna seem.

CHARLES LAMB, A Farewell to Tobacco, l. 28.

Thou through such a mist dost show us,
That our best friends do not know us.

CHARLES LAMB, A Farewell to Tobacco, l. 37.

For thy sake, Tobacco, I
Would do anything but die.

CHARLES LAMB, A Farewell to Tobacco, l. 122.

6 Tobacco has been my evening comfort and my morning curse for these five years.

LAMB, Letter to Wordsworth, 28 Sept., 1805.

7 Hold on with a bulldog grip, and chew and smoke as much as possible.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Telegram to General Grant, 17 Aug., 1864.

8 Tobacco, charmer of my mind.
When like the meteor's transient gleam,

Thy substance gone to air I find,

I think, alas! my life's the same.

(Tabac! dont mon âme est ravie,

Lorsque je te vois te perdre en l'air,

Aussi promptement qu'un éclair,

Je vois l'image de ma vie.)

MISSON, Memoirs of Travels in England.

9 When smoking began to go out of fashion, learning began to go out of fashion also.

RICHARD PORSON. (WATSON, Life.)

The Elizabethan age might be better named the beginning of the smoking era.

J. M. BARRIE, My Lady Nicotine. Ch. 14.

10 Divine tobacco.

SPENSER, Faerie Queene. Bk. iii, canto v, st. 32.

11 It is not for nothing that this "ignoble tabagie," as Michelet calls it, spreads over all the world. Michelet rails against it because it renders you happy apart from thought or work; to provident women this will seem no evil influence in married life. Whatever keeps a man in the front garden, whatever checks wandering fancy and all inordinate ambition, whatever makes for lounging and contentment, makes just so surely for domestic happiness.

R. L. STEVENSON, Virginibus Puerisque. Pt. i.

12 The Indian weed now withered quite;

Green at morn, cut down at night;

Shows thy decay: all flesh is hay:

Thus think, then drink Tobacco.

ROBERT WISDOM (?), A Religious Use of Tobacco (1560) "Drink tobacco" means to drink in, or smoke.

And when the smoke ascends on high,
Think thou behold'st the vanity

Of worldly stuff, gone with a puff,

Thus think, then drink Tobacco.

JOHN ESKINE, Gospel Sonnets: Meditations on Tobacco. (1672)

And when the pipe is foul within,
Think how the soul's defiled with sin;

To purge with fire it does require,

Thus think, and drink tobacco.

GEORGE WITHER (?), Tobacco. (D'URFEX, Pills to Purge Melancholy, 1699.) The verses were signed "G. W."

The ashes that are left behind,
May serve to put thee still in mind

That unto dust return thou must:

Thus think, then drink Tobacco.

GEORGE WITHER (?), Tobacco.

Tobacco's but an Indian weed,

Grows green at morn, cut down at eve;

It shows our decay, we are but clay

Think on this when you smoke Tobacco.

SCOTT, Rob Roy. Quoted as an old song.

Am I not—a smoker and a brother?
Unsuborn. (Smoker's Guide, Ch. 4.)

II—Tobacco: Its Faults

It's all one thing—both tend into one scope—
To live upon Tobacco and on Hope,
The one's but smoke, the other is but wind.
SIR ROBERT AYTON, Sonnet on Tobacco

Pernicious weed! whose scent the fair annoys,
Unfriendly to society's chief joys,
Thy worst effect is banishing for hours
The sex whose presence civilizes ours.
COWPER, Conversation, l. 251

Tobacco, an outlandish weed,
Doth in the land strange wonders breed;
It taints the breath, the blood it dries,
It burns the head, it blinds the eyes;
It dries the lungs, scourgeth the lights,
It 'numbs the soul, it dulls the sprites;
It brags a man into a maze,
And makes him sit for others' gaze;
It mars a man, it mars a purse,
A lean one fat, a fat one worse;
A white man black, a black man white,
A night a day, a day a night;
It turns the brain like cat in pan,
And makes a Jack a gentleman.

FREDERICK WILLIAM FAIRBOLT, Tobacco.

Neither do thou hast after that tawney weed tobacco.

BEN JONSON, Bartholomew Fair. Act ii, sc. 1.

Tobacco is the tomb of love
BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Sybil. Bk. I, ch. 16.

5
Let us take the air, in a tobacco trance,
Admire the monuments,
Discuss the late events,
Correct our watches by the public clocks,
Then sit for half an hour and drink our backs.

T. S. ELIOT, Portrait of a Lady

The scatterbrain, Tobacco. Yet a man of no conversation should smoke.
EMERSON, Journals, 1866.

A branch of the sin of drunkenness, which is the root of all sins.

DOUGLAS I ON ENGLAND, A Counterblast to Tobacco.

Herein is not only a great vanity, but a great contempt of God's good gifts, that the sweetness of man's breath, being a good gift of God, should be wilfully strangled by the stinking smoke . . . A constant habit to the eye, fatal to the nose, harmful to the brain, dangerous to the lungs, and in the black, stinking fumes thereof nearest resembling the horrible Egyptian smoke of the pit that is bottomless.

JAMES I ON TOBACCO, A Counterblast to Tobacco.

The tobacco business is a conspiracy against womanhood and manhood. It owes its origin to that scoundrel, Sir Walter Raleigh, who was likewise the founder of American slavery.

JOHN H. KELLOGG, Tobacco.

Tobacco hic,
If a man be well it will make him sick.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 296 (1678)

Tobacco hic,
Will make you well if you be sick.
J. O. HALLIWELL, Popular Rhymes, 180.

Ods me, I marle what pleasure or felicity
they have in taking this roguish tobacco!
it's good for nothing but to choke a man, and fill him full of smoke and embers

BEN JONSON, Every Man in His Humour. Act iii, sc. 2.

I have a faint recollection of pleasure derived from smoking dried lily-stems, before I was a man I have never smoked anything more noxious.

H. D. THOREAU. (EMERSON, Thoreau.)

III—Tobacco: The Pipe

12
For this you've my word, and I never yet broke it.
So put that in your pipe, my Lord Otto, and smoke it.

R. H. BARRHAM, The Lay of St Odille St. 14.

13
Little tube of mighty pow'r,
Charmer of an idle hour
ISAAC HAWKINS BROWNE, A Pipe of Tobacco.

14
The pipe, with solemn interposing puff,
Makes half a sentence at a time enough;
The dozing sages drop the drowsy strain,
Then pause, and puff—and speak, and pause
again.

15
With what a genius for administration
We rearrange the rumbling universe,
And map the course of man's regeneration,
Over a pipe.

WILLIAM ERNEST HENLEY, Inter Sodales.

16
Tobacco is a traveler,
Come from the Indies hither;
It passed sea and land
Ere it came to my hand,
And 'scaped the wind and weather.

Tobacco's a renegade,
And in a pipe delighteth;
It descends in a clog,
Through the organ of the nose,
With a relish that saveth.

BARRIE HOLMES, Topotomica, (1830)

1 Certain things are good for nothing until they have been kept a long while; and some are good for nothing until they have been long kept and used. Of the first, wine is the illustrious and immortal example. Of those which must be kept and used I will name three,—meerschaum pipes, violins, and poems. The meerschaum is but a poor affair until it has burned a thousand offerings to the cloud-compelling deities. . . . The fire is lighted in its central shrine, and gradually the juices which the broad leaves of the Great Vegetable had sucked up from an acre and curdled into a drachm are diffused through its thirsting pores.

O. W. HOLMES, The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, Ch. 5.

2 May be the truth is, that one pipe is wholesome, two pipes toothsome, three pipes noisy, four pipes fulsome, five pipes quarrelsome; and that's the sum on't.

LAMB, Letter to Coleridge, 13 April, 1803.

3 With pipe and book at close of day,
Oh, what is sweeter? mortal say.

It matters not what book on knee,
Old Isaak or the Odyssey,
It matters not meerschaum or clay.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, With Pipe and Book.

4 Still let us puff, puff; be life smooth, be it rough,

Such enjoyment we'er ever in lack o';
The more peace and good-will will abound as we fill

A jolly good pipe of Tobacco!

JOHN USHER, The Pipe of Tobacco.

5 Contented I sit with my pint and my pipe,
Puffing sorrow and care far away,
And surely the brow of grief nothing can wipe,

Like smoking and moist'ning our clay; . . .
For tho' at my simile many may joke,
Man is but a pipe—and his life but smoke.

UNKNOWN, Content and a Pipe.

IV—Tobacco: Cigar and Cigarette

6 The sweet post-prandial cigar.

ROBERT BUCHANAN, De Bernay.

7 Sublime tobacco! which from east to west,
Cheers the tar's labour or the Turkman's rest;
Which on the Moslem's ottoman divides
His hours, and rivals opium and his brides;
Magnificent in Stamboul, but less grand,
Though not less loved, in Wapping or the Strand;

Divine in hookah, ghoulia is a pipe,
When tipped with amber, tacklow, rich, and ripe;

Yet thy true lovers more admire by far
Thy naked beauties—Give me a cigar!
BYRON, The Island. Canto II, st. 19.

8 Some sigh for this and that,
My wishes don't go far,
The world may wag at will,
So I have my cigar.
THOMAS HOOD, The Cigar. St. 1.

They tell me Nancy Low
Has married Mr. R.;
The jilt! but I can live,
So I have my cigar.
THOMAS HOOD, The Cigar. St. 14.

9 For Maggie has written a letter to give me my choice between
The wee little whimpering Love and the great god Nick o' Teen.
KIPLING, The Betrothed.

A million surplus Maggies are willing to bear the yoke;
And a woman is only a woman, but a good Cigar is a Smoke.

RODNEY KIPPLING, The Betrothed.

Woman in this scale, the weed in that, Jupiter, bang out thy balance, and weigh them both; and if thou give the preference to woman, ah! I can say is, the next time Juno ruffles thee—O Jupiter, try the weed.

BULWER-LYTTON, What Will He Do With It?
Bk. I, ch. 6.

A maid unto her lover sternly said:
"Forego the Indian weed before we wed,
For smoke take flame, I'll be that flame's bright lantern;

To have your Anna, give up your Havana."
The wretch, when thus she brought him to the scratch,

Lit the cigar and threw away the match.

UNKNOWN, It Ended in Smoke.

10 What this country really needs is a good five cent cigar.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL, Remark, while presiding over the U. S. Senate during a debate on the needs of the country.

The light ones may be killers,
And the dark ones may be mild;
Not the wrappers, but the fillers,
Make cigars or women wild.

KRITH PARSONS, Popular Fallacies.

11 Yes, social friend, I love thee well,
In learned doctors' spite;

Thy clouds all other clouds dispel,
And lap me in delight.
CHARLES SPRAGUE, To My Cigar.

12 It was my last cigar, it was my last cigar;
I breath'd a sigh to think, in sooth,
It was my last cigar.

UNKNOWN, My Last Cigar. A popular college song for many years. A parody, My First Cigar, was written as long ago as 1867, by
W. C. ROUSSEAU, then a student at Princeton.

¹ A cigarette is the perfect type of a perfect pleasure. It is exquisite, and it leaves one unsatisfied. What more can you want?

^{1a} There is left for myself then but one day in the week—today. Any man can fight the battles of today. Any woman can carry the burdens of just one day. Any man can resist the temptations of today. Oh, friends, it is only when we willfully add the burdens of those two awful eternities, yesterday and tomorrow, such burdens as only the mighty God can sustain, that we break down. It isn't the experience of today that drives men mad. It is the remorse for something that happened yesterday, and the dread of what tomorrow may disclose.

17 Some say "to-morrow" never comes,
A saying oft thought right;
But if to-morrow never came,
No end were of "to-night."
The fact is this, time flies so fast,
That e'er we've time to say
"To-morrow's come," presto! behold!
"To-morrow" proves "To-day."

TOLERANCE

18 He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.

ANDERSON, Cato. Act v, sc. 4.

A man's capable of understanding . . . how the ether vibrates, and what's going on in the sun—but how any other man can blow his nose differently from him, that he's incapable of understanding.

TURGENEV, Fathers and Children. Ch. 23.

19 I know not what record of sin awaits me in the other world, but this I know, that I was moving mean enough to despise a man because he was ignorant, or because he was poor—or because he was black

AULUS GELLIUS, Noctes Atticæ. Bk. 1, ch. 15, sec. 3. Quoting Homer.

It was excellently said of that philosopher, that there was a wall or parapet of teeth set in our mouth, to restrain the petulance of our words.
BEN JONSON, Explorata: Lingua Sapientis.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.
New Testament: Matthew, xxii, 13.

I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.
Old Testament: Job, xix, 20. Often incorrectly quoted, "I have escaped by the skin of my teeth."

Thais has black, Lecania white teeth; what is the reason? Thais has her own, Lecania ones she bought.

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. v, epig. 43.

Thais her teeth are black and nought,
Lecania's white are grown;
But what's the reason? these are bought,
The other wears her own.

II—Tooth: The Aching Tooth

An aching tooth is better out than in,

To lose a rotten member is a gain.
RICHARD BAXTER, Hypocrites.

1 My curse upon your venom'd stang,
That shoots my tortur'd gooms along,
An' thro' my lug gies monie a twang
Wi' gnawing vengeance,
Tearing my nerves wi' bitter pang,
Like racking engines!

BURNS, Address to the Toothache. St. 1.

2 The tongue is ever turning to the aching tooth.
THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4796.
FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1746.

3 Of all our pains, since man was curst,
I mean of body, not the mental,
To name the worst, among the worst,
The dental sure is transcendental;
Some bit of masticating bone,
That ought to help to clear a shelf:
But lets its proper work alone,
And only seems to gnaw itself.

THOMAS HOOD, A True Story, l. 1.

One tooth he had with many fangs,
That shot at once as many pangs, . . .
One touch of that extatic stump
Could jerk his limbs, and make him jump.

10 If you will be a traveller, have always the eyes of a falcon, the ears of an ass, the face of an ape, the mouth of a hog, the shoulder of a camel, the legs of a stag, and see that you never want two bags very full, that is one of patience and another of money.

JOHN FLORIO, Second Fruits. Fo. 93. (1591)

A traveller must have the back of an ass to bear all, a tongue like the tail of a dog to flatter all,
the mouth of a hog to eat what is set before him,
the ear of a merchant to hear all and say nothing.
THOMAS NASHE, Works, v, 141. There are many variations of this saying, which is included in most of the collections of proverbs.

II—Travel: Its Wisdom

16 The traveled mind is the catholic mind educated from exclusiveness and egotism.

AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT, Table Talk: Travel.

Traveling is no fool's errand to him who carries his eyes and itinerary along with him.

AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT, Table Talk: Travel.

17 Travel, in the younger sort, is a part of education; in the elder, a part of experience. He that travelleth into a country, before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Travel.

Let him sequester himself from the company of his countrymen, and chat in such places where there is good company of the nation where he travelleth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Travel.

1 Young men should travel, if but to amuse themselves.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 16.

2 If a shower approach,
You find safe shelter in the next stage-coach.
There, prison'd in a parlour snug and small,
Like bottled wasps upon a southern wall,
The man of business and his friends compress'd,
Forget their labours.

COWPER, Retirement, l. 491.

3 Travel teaches toleration.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Contarini Fleming. Pt. v, ch. 7.

Virtue and vice, happiness and misery, are much more equally distributed to nations than those are permitted to suppose who have never been from home, and who believe, like the Chinese, that their residence is the center of the world, of light, of privilege, and of enjoyment.

AMASA DELANO, Narrative of Voyages, p. 256.

Go far—too far you cannot, still the farther
The more experience finds you: And go sparing;

One meal a week will serve you, and one suit,
Through all your travels; for you'll find it certain,

The poorer and the better you appear,
The more you look through still.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy. Bk. I.

2 There are three wants which never can be satisfied: that of the rich, who wants something more; that of the sick, who wants something different; and that of the traveller, who says, "Anywhere but here."

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Considerations by the Way.

It is for want of self-culture that the superstition of Travelling, whose idols are Italy, England,
Egypt, retains its fascination for all educated Americans. They who made England, Italy, or Greece venerable in the imagination, did so by sticking fast where they were. . . . The soul is no traveller; the wise man stays at home. . . .
Travelling is a fool's paradise.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

3 Some minds improve by travel, others, rather,
Resemble copper wire, or brass,
Which get the narrower by going farther!
THOMAS HOOD, Ode to Rae Wilson, l. 229.

4 They change their clime, not their disposition, who run beyond the sea. (Caelum, non

HORACE, Odes. Bk. II, ode 14, l. 21.

His house, his home, his heritage, his lands,
The laughing dames in whom he did delight,
Whose large blue eyes, fair locks, and snowy hands,

Might shake the saintship of an anchorite,
And long had fed his youthful appetite;
His goblets brim'd with every costly wine,
And all that mote to luxury invite,
Without a sigh he left, to cross the brine,
And traverse Paynim shores, and pass earth's central line.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto I, st. 11.

7 Why do we in our short term of life strive with might and main for so many things?
Why do we change for lands warmed by another sun? (Quid brevi fortes jaculamur ævo Multa? Quid terras alio calentes Sole mutamus?)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. II, ode 16, l. 17.

8 Fools are aye fond o' flittin', and wise men o' sittin'.

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish.

9 Everywhere is nowhere. When a person spends all his time in foreign travel, he ends by having many acquaintances, but no friends. (Nusquam est, qui ubique est.)

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. ii, sec. 2.

What profit is there in crossing the sea and in going from one city to another? If you would escape your troubles, you need not another place but another personality. Perhaps you have reached Athens, or perhaps Rhodes; choose any state you fancy, how does it matter what its character may be? You will be bringing to it your own.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. civ, sec. 8.

What benefit has travel of itself ever been able to give anyone? . . . Travelling cannot give us judgment, or shake off our errors; it merely holds our attention for a moment by a certain novelty.

SENECA, Epistula ad Lucillum. Epist. civ, sec. 13.

10 Ay, now am I in Arden: the more fool I;

IV—Travel: Travellers' Tales

There three sorts be Of people lying, which may themselves defend In lying, for they have authority to lie: the first is pilgrims that have great wonders seen In strange countries;
such may say what they will.

ALEXANDER BARCLAY, Ship of Fools, ii, 68. (1508)

Travellers, poets and liars are three words all of one signification.

RICHARD BRATHWAITE, English Gentleman, 77.

Travellers . . . have liberty to utter what

He is composed and framed of treachery.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act v, sc. 1, l. 256.

9 And wilt thou still be hammering treachery, To tumble down thy husband and thyself From top of honour to disgrace's feet?

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act i, sc. 2, l. 47.

It is the bright day that brings forth the adder.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 14.

12 Such protection as vultures give to lambs.

SHERIDAN, Pizarro. Act ii, sc. 2.

13 Betrayers are hated even by those whom they benefit. (Proditores, etiam iis quos anteposunt, inveniunt.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. i, l. 58.

TREASON

I—TREASON: Apotegms

14 Treason hath blister'd heels, dishonest things Have bitter rivers, though delicious springs.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Charles, Duke of Byron. Act i, sc. 1.

15 And to talk treason for his daily bread.

DRYDEN, Abdalom and Achitophel. Pt. ii, l. 351.

Treason is not own'd when 'tis descried; Successful crimes alone are justified.

DRYDEN, The Medal, l. 207.

16 Rebellion must be managed by many swords; treason to his prince's person may be with one knife.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy and the Profane State: The Traitor.

17 Treason doth never prosper, what's the reason?

For if it prosper, none dare call it Treason.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Of Treason. (Epigrams. Bk. iv, epig. 259.)

18 Cæsar had his Brutus; Charles the First, his Cromwell; and George the Third ["Treason!" cried the Speaker]—may profit by their example. If this be treason, make the most of it.

PATRICK HENRY, Speech in the Virginia Convention, 1765.

I first drew in New England's air, and from her bards breast

Sucked in the tyrant-hating milk that will not let me rest;

And if my words seem treason to the dullard and the tame,

'Tis but my Bay-State dialect,—our fathers spake the same.

J. R. LOWELL, On the Capture of Fugitive Slaves near Washington. St. 2.

19 The labyrinths of treason.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Trears.

20 I think lightly of what is called treason against a government. That may be your duty today, or mine. But treason against the peo-pie, against mankind, against God, is a great sin not lightly to be spoken of.

THEODORE PARKER, Speech on the Mexican War, 1846.

1 Treason is but trusted like the fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV. Act v, sc. 2, l. 9.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not boop at them.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 105.

By treason's tooth bare-gnawn and canker-bit.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act v, sc. 3, l. 122.

2 Some guard these traitors to the block of death,

Treason's true bed and yielder up of breath.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 122.

3 The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 101.

II—Treason: To Hate the Traitor but Love the Treason

4 Princes in this case
Do hate the traitor, though they love the treason.

SAMUEL DANIEL, Tragedy of Cleopatra, iv, 1.
This principle is old, but true as fate,
Kings may love treason, but the traitor hate.

THOMAS DEKKER, I The Honest Whore, iv, 4.

5 Hate then the traitor, but yet love the treason.

DRYDEN AND LEE, Duke of Guise. Act iii, sc. 1.
Treason is loved of many, but the traitor is hated of all.

ROBERT GREENE, Pandosto.

6 For while the treason I detest,
The traitor still I love.

JOHN HOOPE, Metastasio. Act i, sc. 5.

Though I love the treason, I hate the traitor.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 7 March, 1667.

7 He loved treachery but hated a traitor. (ὁλοῖτο τὴν προδοσίαν, ἀπὸδοῦν δὲ μισοῖτο.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Romulus. Ch. 17, sec. 3. Of Caesar. See also under SEN.

Traitors are hated even by those whom they prefer.
(Proditorum etiam his quos anteposuit invidi sunt.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. 1, sec. 58.

O sin! I love the fruit that treason brings,
But those that cast are the traitors, them I hate.

ROBERT GREENE, Soliman, l. 2122. (1594)

III—Treason: The Traitor

8 Is there not some chosen curse,
Some hidden thunder in the stores of Heav'n's,
Raid with uncommissioned wrath, to blast the sin
Who sows his wickedness to his country's ruin?

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 21.

Oh for a tongue to curse the slave
Whose treason, like a deadly blight,
Comes o'er the councils of the brave
And blasts them in their hour of might!
MOORE, Lalla Rookh: The Fire-Worshippers.
Pt. ii, l. 476.

9 A traitor to his country commits equal treason against mankind.

JOHN A. ANDREW, Address, Massachusetts Legislature, 3 Jan., 1862.

10 For pantisocracy he once had cried
Aloud, a scheme less moral than 'twas clever;
Then grew a hearty anti-jacobin—

Had turn'd his coat—and would have turn'd his skin.

BYRON, The Vision of Judgment. St. 97. Referring to Robert Southey.

Just for a handful of silver he left us,
Just for a riband to stick in his coat.

ROBERT BROWNING, The Lost Leader. Referring to Wordsworth.

The nation looked upon him as a deserter, and he shrunk into insignificance and an Earldom.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Character of Pulteney.

11 No wise man ever thought that a traitor should be trusted. (Nemo unquam sapienti proditori credendum putavit.)

CICERO, In Verrem. No. ii, ch. 1, sec. 15.

12 The man who pauses on the paths of treason,
Halts on a quicksand; the first step engulfs him.

AARON HILL, Henry V. Act i, sc. 1.

13 The unsuccessful strugglers against tyranny have been the chief martyrs of treason laws in all countries.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. viii, p. 332.

14 No religion binds men to be traitors.

BEN JOWSON, Catiline. Act iii, sc. 2.

15 The traitor to Humanity is the traitor most accursed;

Man is more than Constitutions; better rot
beneath the sod,

Than be true to Church and State while we are doubly false to God!

J. R. LOWELL, On the Capture of Certain Fugitive Slaves near Washington. St. 5.

Write on my gravestone: "Infidel, Traitor."—Infidel to every church that compromises with wrong; traitor to every government that oppresses the people.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

16 He looked upon his people, and a tear was in his eye.

He looked upon the traitors, and his glance was stern and high.

MACAULAY, Ivy.

1 Though those that are betray'd
Do feel the treason sharply, yet the traitor
Stands in worse case of woe.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act III, sc. 4, l. 87.

2 An artful traitor as any is in the universal world, or in France, or in England!

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act IV, sc. 8, l. 10.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act v, sc. 1, l. 191.

A kind of puppy To the old dam, treason.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act I, sc. 1, l. 175.

A giant traitor.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act I, sc. 2, l. 199.

3 Maugre thy strength, youth, place, and eminence,
Despite thy victor sword and fire-new fortune,

Thy valour and thy heart, thou art a traitor;
And, from the extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy foot,
A most loath-spotted traitor.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act v, sc. 3, l. 131.

Son: What is a traitor?

Lady Macduff: Why, one that swears and lies.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act IV, sc. 2, l. 46.

4 Live loathed and long,
Most smiling, smooth, detested parasites,
Courteous destroyers, affable wolves, meek
bears,

You fools of fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act III, sc. 6, l. 103.

5 It [traitor] does not mean in England what it does in France. In your language traitor means betrayer. . . . In our country it means simply one who is not wholly devoted to our English interests.

BERNARD SHAW, Saint Joan. Sc. 4.

6 Your sweet faces make good fellows fools
And traitors.

TENNYSO, Gervant and Enid, l. 399.

I—Tree: Apothegms

7 Generations pass while some trees stand, and old families last not three oaks.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Hydriotaphia. Ch. v, sec. 6.

8 A bird's weight can break the infant tree
Which after holds an aery in its arms.

ROBERT BROWNING, Luria. Act IV.

9 The tree of life.
Old Testament: Genesis, II, 9; Proverbs, xiii, 12; Proverbs, xx, 4. (Lignum vite.—Vulgata.)

And on the Tree of Life,
The middle tree and highest there that grew.
MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. IV, l. 194.

And all amid them stood the Tree of Life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. IV, l. 218.

10 The tree that God plants no winds hurt it.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

If the roots are deep, no fear that the wind will uproot the tree. (Kén shên pu 'pa fêng yao tung.)

UNKNOWN. A Chinese proverb.

11 Great trees are good for nothing but shade.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

Great trees give more shade than fruit. (Gli arberi grandi fanno più ombra che frutto.)

UNKNOWN. An Italian proverb.

He that betaketh him to a good tree hath good shade.

EMERSON, Journals, 1866.

Those trees in whose dim shadow
The ghastly priest doth reign,—
The priest who slew the slayer,
And shall himself be slain.

MACAULAY, The Battle of Lake Regillus. St. 10.

12 For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?

New Testament: Luke, xliii, 31.

13 The tree is known by his fruit.
New Testament: Matthew, xii, 33.

You shall know that fruit by the tree.
WILLIAM BULLEIN, Dialogue, 86. (1564)

A tree is known by the fruit, and not by the leaves.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 11.

Only at trees bearing fruit do people throw stones.
W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 825.

He is a fool who looks at the fruit of lofty trees, but does not measure their height. (Stultus est qui fructus magnarum arborum spectat, altitudi-nem non metitur.)

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFINUS, De Rebus Gestis

Alexandri Magni. Bk. vii, sec. 8.

14 The highest and most lofty trees have the most reason to dread the thunder.

2, sec. 1. See also CREATURES: ITS PENALTIES.

15 Jock, when ye hae naething else to do, ye may be aye sticking in a tree; it will be growing, Jock, when ye're sleeping.

SCOTT, The Heart of Midlothian. Ch. 8.

16 But, poor old man, thou prunest a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act II, sc. 3, l. 63.

17 Trees do not delight all persons. (Non om-nes arbusta juvant.)

VERON, Belogues. No. IV, l. 2.

II—Tree: As the Twig Is Bent

1 As long as the twig is gentle and pliant . . .
With small force and strength it may be bent.

THOMAS INGELAND, The Disobedient Child, 56.

I will bend the tree while it is a wand.

THOMAS LODGE, Rosalynde, 18.

Young twigs are sooner bent than old trees.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues and His England.

Tender twigs are bent with ease,

Aged trees do break with bending

ROBERT SOUTHWELL, Loss in Delay.

2 By compliance is the curved bough bent away from the tree. (Flectitur obsequio cur-vatus ab arbore ramus.)

OVIN, Ars Amatoria. Bk. II, l. 179.

3 Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclin'd.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epist. I, l. 150.

4 An old tree is hard to straighten. (Vieil arbre est mal à redresser.)

UNKNOWN. A French proverb.

III—Tree: Planting the Tree

5 What do we plant when we plant the tree?
We plant the ship that will cross the sea,
We plant the mast to carry the sails,
We plant the planks to withstand the gales—
The keel, the keelson, and beam and knee—
We plant the ship when we plant the tree.

HENRY ARSEY, What Do We Plant?

What do we plant when we plant the tree?

A thousand things that we daily see.

We plant the spire that out-towers the crag,

We plant the staff for our country's flag,

We plant the shade from the hot sun free;

We plant all these when we plant the tree.

HENRY ARSEY, What Do We Plant?

6 Come, let us plant the apple-tree.
Cleave the tough greensward with the spade;
Wide let its hollow bed be made;
There gently lay the roots, and there
Sift the dark mould with kindly care.

BRYANT, The Planting of the Apple-Tree.

What plant we in this apple-tree?

Buds, which the breath of summer days

Shall lengthen into leafy sprays;

Brought where the thrush, with crimson breast,

Shall haunt, and sing, and hide her nest;

We plant, upon the sunny lea,

A shadow for the noontide hour,

A shelter from the summer shower,

When we plant the apple-tree.

BRYANT, The Planting of the Apple-Tree.

7 What does he plant who plants a tree?
He plants the friend of stud and sky;
He plants the flag of breezes free;
The shaft of beauty, towering high;
He plants a home to heaven high

For song and mother-croon of bird
In hushed and happy twilight heard—
The treble of heaven's harmony—
These things he plants who plants a tree.
H. C. BURRIS, The Heart of the Tree.

8 He who plants a tree Plants a hope.
Rootlets up through fibres blindly grope; . . .
So man's life must climb
From the clods of time
Unto heavens sublime.

Canst thou prophesy, thou little tree,
What the glory of thy boughs shall be?

LUCY LARCOM, Plant a Tree.

He who plants a tree, He plants love.

Tents of coolness spreading out above

Wayfarers he may not live to see.

Gifts that grow are best;

Hands that bless are blest;

Plant: Life does the rest!

Heaven and earth help him who plants a tree,

And his work its own reward shall be.

LUCY LARCOM, Plant a Tree.

9 He that planteth a tree is the servant of God,
He provideth a kindness for many generations,

And faces that he hath not seen shall bless
him.

HENRY VAN DYKE, The Friendly Trees.

IV—Tree: Its Fall

10 The tree will wither long before it fall.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iii, st. 32.

Trees do not die of age: they only spread
Their branches still more proudly—and are dead.

MARION STROBEL, Trees.

11 O leave this barren spot to me!

Spare, woodman, spare the beechen tree.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Beech-Tree's Petition.

Woodman, spare that tree!

Touch not a single bough!

In youth it sheltered me,

And I'll protect it now.

GEORGE POPE MORRIS, The Oak. First printed in The New York Mirror, N. Y., 7 Jan. 1837.

12 In the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, xi, 3.

Wheresoever the tree falleth . . . there it shall rest.

HUGH LATIMER, Seven Sermons, 118.

When the tree is fallen all go with their hatchets.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

13 And garnished with trees that a man might cut down,
Instead of his own expenses.

THOMAS HOOD, Miss Kilmansegg: Her Honeymoon.

1 Ancient trees falling while all was still
Before the storm, in the long interval
Between the gathering clouds and that light breeze

Which Germans call the Wind's bride.
C. G. LELAND, The Fall of the Trees.

2 The ax is laid unto the root of the trees.
New Testament: Matthew, iii, 10; Luke, iii, 9.
The tree falls not at the first stroke.
JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish.

V—Trees: Their Beauty

3 To-day I have grown taller from walking with the trees.

KARL WILSON BAKER, Good Company.

4 I'll lie here and learn How, over their ground,
Trees make a long shadow And a light sound.
LOUISE BOCAN, Knowledge.

5 They say that trees were only practice work
When God made sure his hand
Before he passed to 'cows and men.
I cannot think that true,
Else there would surely sometimes be
An ugly tree.

AVIS D. CARLSON, Trees.

6 The very leaves live for love and in his season every happy tree experiences love's power. (Vivunt in Venerem frondes omnisque vicissim Felix arbor amat.)

CLAUDIAN, De Nuptiis Honorii Augusti, l. 65.

7 No tree in all the grove but has its charms,
Though each its hue peculiar.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. i, l. 307.

8 I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast. . . .
Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

JOYCE KILMER, Trees.

I think that I shall never see
A billboard lovely as a tree.
Perhaps, unless the billboards fall,
I'll never see a tree at all.

ODEN NASH, Song of the Open Road.

"Did you ever see a poem as lovely as this tree?"
ANDIE M. PROCTOR, Helping God to Make a Tree.

Any fool can destroy trees. . . . It took more than three thousand years to make some of the trees in these Western woods. . . . Through all the wonderful, eventful centuries since Christ's time —and long before that—God has cared for these trees, saved them from drought, disease, ava-lanches, and a thousand straining, leveling tempests and floods; but he cannot save them from fools,—only Uncle Sam can do that.

JOHN MUIR, The American Forests. (Atlantic Monthly, vol. lxxx, p. 157.)

9 And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall.

Old Testament: I Kings, iv, 33.

10 Fair trees! where'er your barks I wound,
No name shall but your own be found.
ANDREW MARVELL, The Garden.

11 Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
A sylvan scene, and as the ranks ascend
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. iv, l. 139.

12 A tree is a nobler object than a prince in his coronation robes.

ALEXANDER POPP, Table-Talk.

13 Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 5, l. 1.

14 The trees were gazing up into the sky,
Their bare arms stretched in prayer for the snows.

ALEXANDER SMITH, A Life-Drama. Sc. 2.

15 Much can they praise the trees so straight and high,
The sailing pine, the cedar proud and tall,
The vine-prop elm, the poplar never dry,
The bullock oak, sole king of forests all,
The aspen good for staves, the cypress
funeral,

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors
And poets sage, the fir that weepeth still,
The willow worn of forlorn paramours,
The yew obedient to the bender's will,
The birch for shafts, the willow for the mill,
The myrrh sweet-bleeding in the bitter wound,
The warlike beech, the ash for nothing ill,
The fruitful olive, and the platane round,
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward sound.

SPENSER, Faerie Queene. Bk. i, canto i, st. 8.

16 Many a tree is found in the wood,
And every tree for its use is good;
Some for the strength of the gnarled root,
Some for the sweetness of flower or fruit.

HENRY VAN DYKE, Salute the Trees.

III—Trifles: Their Importance

16 Small matters win great commendation.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Ceremonies.

17 Oh, the little more, and how much it is!

And the little less, and what worlds away!

ROBERT BROWNING, By the Fireside.

18 We find great things are made of little things,
And little things go lessening, till at last
Comes God behind them.

ROBERT BROWNING, Mr. Sludge "The Medium," l. 1141.

Say not "a small event"! Why "small"?

Costs it more pain than this, ye call

A "great event" should come to pass

From that?

ROBERT BROWNING, Pippa Passes: Introduction.

19 Little drops of water, Little grains of sand,
Make the mighty ocean And the pleasant land.

So the little moments, Humble tho' they be,
Make the mighty ages Of Eternity!

So our little errors Lead the soul away

From the paths of virtue, Far in sin to stray.

Little deeds of kindness, Little words of love,

Help to make earth happy Like the Heaven above!

JULIA FLETCHER CARNEY, Little Things. This poem has been erroneously attributed to Ebenezer Cobham Brewer, Daniel Clement Colesworthy, Charles Mackay, and Mrs. Frances S. Osgood. It was written by Mrs. Carney in 1845.

Little drops of water poured into the milk, give the milkman's daughter lovely gowns of silk. Little grains of sugar mingled with the sand, make the grocer's ass's swell to beat the band.

WALT MASON, Little Things.

20 He that shuns trifles must shun the world.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Hero and Leander: Epistle Dedicatory.

Alas! by what slight means are great affairs brought to destruction. (Eheu quam brevibus

An acorn one day proves an oak.

RICHARD CORSEY, Poems. (c. 1630) (CHALMERS, v, 584.)

The greatest oaks have been little acorns.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 4576. (1732)

The lofty oak from a small acorn grows.

LEWIS DUNCOMBE, De Minimis Maxima.

Large streams from little fountains flow,

Tall oaks from little acorns grow.

DAVID EVERETT, Lines Written for a School Declamation.

The mighty oak from an acorn towers;

A tiny seed can fill a field with flowers;

One bell alone tolls out the death of kings;

In every Sussex skylark Shelley sings.

CHARLES DALMON, Much in Little

State: The Good Servant*.

Many strokes overthrow the tallest oaks.

JOHN LUTY, Euphuus, p. 81.

Little strokes fell great Oaks.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1750.

Many strokes, though with a little axe,

Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 54.

By conscientious indentation

The beaver bevells down the tree.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, The Epigram.

12
It's just the little homely things,

The unobtrusive friendly things,

The "won't-you-let-me-help-you" things

That make our pathway light.

GRACE HAINES, Those Little Things.

For want of a nail the shoe is lost, for want of a shoe the horse is lost, for want of a horse the rider is lost.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

For the want of a nail the shoe was lost,

For the want of a shoe the horse was lost

For the want of a horse the rider was lost,
For the want of a rider the battle was lost,
For the want of a battle the kingdom was lost—
And all for want of a horseshoe-nail.

14
Great businesses turn on a little pin.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

Great engines turn on small pivots.

H. G. BOEN, Hand-Book of Proverbs, 366.

The massive gates of Circumstance

Are turned upon the smallest hinge,

And thus some seeming pettish chance

Oft gives our life its after-tinge.

The trifles of our daily lives,

The common things scarce worth recall,

Whereof no visible trace survives,

These are the mainsprings, after all.

LEVY, History. Bk. xxvii, sec. 9.

19
Alas, how easily things go wrong!

A sigh too much, or a kiss too long,

And there follows a mist and a weeping rain.

And life is never the same again.

GEORGE MACDONALD, Phantastes: Down the Lane.

One dark cloud can hide the sunlight;

Loose one string, the pearls are scattered;

Think one thought, a soul may perish;

Say one word, a heart may break.

ANNE PRITCHARD, Philip and Mildred.

Since trifles make the sum of human things,
And half our misery from our foibles springs;
Since little best joys consist in peace and ease;
And though but few can serve yet all may please;
O! let th' ungentle spirit learn from hence,
A small unkindness is a great offence.
To spread large bounties though we wish in vain
Yet all may shun the guilt of giving pain.

TROUBLE

I—Trouble: Apothegms

17 Pack up your troubles in your old kit-bag,
And smile, smile, smile.
GEORGE ASAR. Title and refrain of song written in 1915, and popular with the British soldiers during World War I.

Build for yourself a strong-box.
Fashion each part with care;
Fit it with hoop and padlock;
Put all your troubles there.

Hide therein all your failures,
And each bitter cup you quaff,
Lock all your heartaches within it,
Then sit on the lid and laugh.

TRUST

I.—Trust: Apothegms

The greatest trust between man and man is the trust of giving counsel.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Counsel.

Do not trust all men, but trust men of worth;
the former course is silly, the latter a mark of prudence.

DEMOCRITUS, Ethica, Frag. 374.

It is equally an error to trust all men or no man. (Utroque enim vitium est, et omnibus credere et nihil.)

IV—Trust: The Trusts

Trust.

SAMUEL C. T. DODD introduced this word, as referring to a combination of capital, into the language in 1862, while acting as attorney for John D. Rockefeller.

This is the original trust.

UNKNOWN, Report of Committee, N. Y. State
Senate, after investigation of the Standard Oil Company, in 1888.

We declare our opposition to all combinations of capital, organized as trusts or otherwise.
Republican Platform, 1888.

The interests of the people are betrayed when Trusts and combinations are permitted to exist.
Democratic Platform, 1888.

Earliest attention should be given to those combinations of capital commonly called Trusts.

BENJAMIN HARRISON, Message to Congress, 3 Dec., 1889.

Trusts are largely private affairs.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Speech, Portland, Me., opening Harrison campaign in 1888.

Undigested securities.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN, Interview, N. Y. Times, 30 March, 1903, referring to a mass of securities issued to inflate and water the capitalization of trusts and combinations, promoted and floated in 1901.

An indefinable something is to be done, in a way nobody knows how, at a time nobody knows when, that will accomplish nobody knows what. That, as I understand it, is the program against the trusts.

TRUTH

See also Beauty and Truth

I—Truth: Definitions

Truth is inclusive of all the virtues, is older than sects or schools, and, like charity, more ancient than mankind.

AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT, Table Talk: Discourse. Yet the deepest truths are best read between the lines, and, for the most part, refuse to be written.

AMOS BRONSON ALCOTT, Concord Days: June

Truth is the secret of eloquence and of virtue, the basis of moral authority; it is the highest summit of art and life.

AMIEL, Journal, 17 Dec., 1854.

Another poet, whose name I have forgotten, called Truth the daughter of Time. (Veritatem Temporis filiam.)

AULUS GELLIVS, Noctes Atticæ. Bk. xii, ch. 11.

'Tis not antiquity, nor author, That makes truth Truth, altho' Time's daughter.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 3, l. 663.

Truth is within ourselves: it takes no rise From outward things, whate'er you may believe.

There is an inmost centre in us all,

Where truth abides in fulness.

ROBERT BROWNING, Paracelsus. Pt. i.

Truth makes on the ocean of nature no one track of light—every eye looking on finds its own.

BULWER-LYTTON, Castilians. Essay xiv.

Truth is the shattered mirror strown In myriad bits; while each believes his little bit the whole to own.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth and Cressida, v, 2, 46.

11 Truth in spirit, not truth to letter, is the true variety.

R. L. STEVENSON, Truths of Interiors.

12 Truth is the most valuable thing we have.
Let us economize it.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's Calendar.

13 Wrapping truth in darkness. (Obscuris vera involvens.)

VERGIL, Æneid, Bk. vi, l. 100.

14 But not for golden fancies iron truths make room.

WILLIAM WATSON, The Hope of the World.

15 The longest sword, the strongest lungs, the most voices, are false measures of truth.

BENJAMIN WHITCHCOX, Sermons.

16 Truths that wake, to perish never.

WORDSWORTH, Intimations of Immortality, ix.

III—Truth: The Naked Truth

17 Craft must have clothes, but truth loves to go naked.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 1200.

Truth's best ornament is nakedness.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia, No. 5314.

18 The naked truth (Nuda Veritas).

HORACE, Odes, Bk. i, ode 24, l. 7.

19 The truth, naked and unashamed, is always unpleasant.

JAMES HUNCKER, Iconoclasm, p. 188.

20 The truth shows best being naked.

JOHN TAYLOR THE WATER-POET, Watermans' Swift. (c. 1613)

Naked Truth needs no shift.

WILLIAM PENN. Title of a Broadside. (1674)

Mere white truth in simple nakedness.

TENNISON, Bala and Bala, l. 509.

22 Because a cold rage seizes one at whales

To show the bitter old and wrinkled truth
Stripped naked of all vesture that beguiles, False dreams, false hopes, false masks and modes of youth.

JAMES THOMSON, The City of Dreadful Night:
Poem, St. 2.

IV—Truth Lies at the Bottom of a Well

23 Of truth we know nothing, for truth is in a well. (Ἔρεθ δὲ ὀδὴν ὕπαιρ τοῦ βυθίου γὰρ ἡ ἀλήθεια.)

DEMOCRITUS. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Pyrrho. Bk. ix, sec. 72.)

Nature has buried truth at the bottom of the sea.

DEMOCRITUS (CICERO, Academicorum Quæstionum Bk. ii, sec. 40.)

Democritus quasi in puteo quodam sic æta, at fundus sit nullus, veritatem lacere demeritum.

LACTANTIUS, Institutes, iii, 25.

We are born to inquire after truth; it belongs to a greater power to possess it. It is not, as Democritus said, hid in the bottom of the deeps, but rather elevated to an infinite height in the divine knowledge.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 8.

Let us seek the solution of these doubts at the bottom of the inexhaustible well, where Heraclitus says that truth is hidden.

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. i, ch. 18.

Truth, which wise men say, doth lie in a well.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Pseudodoxia Epid., i, 5. It is an old saying that Truth lies in a well, but the misfortune is, that some men will use no chain to draw her up.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. I, No. 250.

Truth keeps the bottom of her well.

JOAQUIN MILLER, Song of the South. Sec. iii, pt. 2.

Truth is always at the bottom of a grave.

JAMES HUNTER, Iconoclasts, p. 63.

Truth lies wrapped up and hidden in the depths. (Involuta veritas in alto latet.)

SENECA, De Beneficiis. Bk. vii, sec. 1.

Truth, they say, lies in a well,

Why, I vow, I ne'er could see;

Let the water-drinkers tell,

There it always lay for me.

SHERIDAN, The Duenna. Act iii, sc. 1.

Whilst the unlearned . . . were all busied in getting down to the bottom of the well, where Truth keeps her little court.

SMOLLET, Tristram Shandy. Bk. iv, pt. 1.

The sages say, Dame Truth delights to dwell (Strange Mansion!) in the bottom of a well: Questions are then the Windlass and the Rope That pull the grave old Gentlewoman up.

JOHN WOLCOT, Birthday Ode.

We never see the stars
Till we can see naught but them. So with truth.
And yet if one would look down a deep well,
Even at noon, we might see those same stars.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Water and Wood.

Truth, after all, wears a different face to everybody, and it would be too tedious to wait till all were agreed. She is said to lie at the bottom of a well, for the very reason, perhaps, that whoever looks down in search of her sees his own image at the bottom, and is persuaded not only that he has seen the Goddess, but that she is far better-looking than he had imagined.

J. R. LOWELL, Democracy.

V.—Truth Is Mighty and Will Prevail

Great is truth, and it prevaleth. (Magna est veritas, et prævalet.)

Magis Sacra Vulgata Editio: III Esdras, iv, 41. The Vulgata is the Latin version of the Bible completed by St. Jerome in 405, of which the Gutenberg (or Mainz) Bible (1455) was the first printed edition, as it was also the first important book printed from movable type. The Clementine text, a recension made by order of Pope Clement VIII, and completed in 1605, is the authorized text of the Roman Catholic Church, of which the Douai version, completed in 1609, is the authorized English text. All of these include the books which were placed in the Apocrypha by the editors of the "Authorized" or Protestant version in 1611. Among them was III Esdras, which, in the Apocrypha, is I Esdras. Popular usage has substituted the future, prævalet, "will prevail," for the present, prævalet, as given in the Vulgata version, but it is without authority. However, the quotation is almost always given, "Truth is mighty and will prevail."

Great is Truth, and mighty above all things.

Apocrypha: I Esdras, iv, 41. (1611)

Truth, by its own sinews, will prevail.

DRYDEN, Religio Laici, l. 349.

Truth in the end shall prevail.

ULPIAN FULWELL, Art Adulandi E 4. (c. 1580)

And fierce though the fiends may fight, and long though the angels hide,

I know that truth and right have the universe on their side.

WASHINGTON GLADEN, Ultima Veritas.

The truth is great, and shall prevail,
When none cares whether it prevail or not.

COVENTRY PATMORE, Magna Est Veritas

Truth will ultimately prevail where there is pains taken to bring it to light.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, Maxims.

VI.—Truth Shall Make You Free

Where Truth deigns to come,
Her sister Liberty will not be far.

MARK AKENSIDE, Pleasures of the Imagination. Bk. i, l. 23.

He is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. v, l. 733.

Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free.

New Testament: John, viii, 32.

Truth and, by consequence, liberty, will always be the chief power of honest men.

MADAME DE STAËL, Lettre to General Moreau

If the truth shall have made thee free, thou shalt not care for the vain words of men.

A KEMPIS, De Imitatione Christi. Bk. iii, ch. 4.

VII.—Truth: Its Power

What governs men is the fear of truth.

AMIEL, Journal, 1 March, 1869.

Truth is the strong thing. Let man's life be true!

ROBERT BROWNING, In a Balcony, l. 233.

Truth tramples on the lie as oil on water.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 10.

Truth and oil are even above.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

1 Great is the power of truth. (A magna vis veritas.)

CICERO, Pro Caelio Rufo. Sec. 26.

I am conquered by truth. (Vincer veris.)

ERASMUS, Diuturnum.

Truth, Life, and Love are a law of annihilation to everything unlike themselves, because they declare nothing but God.

MARY BAKER EDDY, Science and Health, p. 243.

2 Above all things truth beareth away the victory.

APOCRYPHA: I Esdras, iii, 12.

As for the truth, it endureth, and is always strong; it liveth and conquereth for evermore.

APOCRYPHA: I Esdras, iv, 38.

3 It is right to yield to the truth. (Licet concedere veris.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 3, l. 305.

4 You show that truth can ne'er decay,
Whatever fate befalls;

I, that the myrtle and the bay

Shoot fresh on ruined walls.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR, In After Time.

5 No power can die that ever wrought for Truth;

Thereby a law of Nature it became,

And lives unwithered in its blithesome youth,
When he who called it forth is but a name.

J. R. LOWELL, Elegy on the Death of Dr. Channing. Inscribed beneath Lowell's bust in the Hall of Fame.

Get but the truth once uttered, and 't is like
A star new-born, that drops into its place,
And which, once circling in its placid round,
Not all the tumult of the earth can shake.

J. R. LOWELL, A Glance Behind the Curtain, l. 173.

Put golden padlocks on Truth's lips, be callous
As ye will,

From soul to soul, o'er all the world, leaps one
Electric thrill.

J. R. LOWELL, On the Capture of Certain Fugitive Slaves Near Washington.

6 Methinks the truth should live from age to age,
As 'twere retail'd to all posterity,
Even to the general all-ending day.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 76.

7 The truth is always the strongest argument

SOPHOCLES, Phædra. Frag. 737.

VIII.—Truth: Love of Truth

8 Though both [Plato and truth] are dear to me, it is a sacred duty to put truth first.

(Ἀμφότερ' γὰρ ἔστιν φθόνῳ δέον προτιθέν τῇ ἀληθείᾳ.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. i, ch. 6, sec. 1.

Plato is dear to me, but dearer still is truth.

(Amicus Plato, sed magis amica veritas.)

ARISTOTLE (CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 51.)

Socrates is dear to me, but dearer still is truth.

ARISTOTLE (AMMONIUS, Aristotelis Vita, 399.)

If you will take my advice, you will think little of Socrates, and a great deal more of truth.

SOCRATES. (PLATO, Phædo. Sec. 40.)

9 Arm thyself for the truth!

BULWER-LYTON, The Lady of Lyons. Act v, sc. 1.

Wherever the truth is injured, defend it.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. iii, p. 269.

Stake life upon the truth. (Vitam impendere vero.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. iv, l. 91. The motto of Rousseau.

10 Truth! though the Heavens crush me for following her.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. ii, ch. 7.

11 Remember, then, as long as you live, that nothing but strict truth can carry you through the world, with either your conscience or your honour unwounded.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 Sept., 1747.

12 For truth has such a face and such a mien
As to be lov'd needs only to be seen.

DRYDEN, The Hind and Panther. Pt. i, l. 33.

13 He that feeds men serveth few;
He serves all who dares be true.

EMERSON, The Celestial Love.

14 Nothing shall warp me from the belief that every man is a lover of truth.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: New England Reformers.

15 In proportion as we perceive and embrace the truth do we become just, heroic, magnanimous, divine.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON, Free Speech and Free Inquiry.

16 The contemplation of truth and beauty is the proper object for which we were created, which calls forth the most intense desires of the soul, and of which it never tires.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Criticisms on Art. Vol. i, p. 2.

To love truth for truth's sake is the principal part of human perfection in this world, and the seed-plot of all other virtues.

JOHN LOCKE, Letter to Anthony Collins, Esq., 29 Oct., 1703.

17 I do not fear to follow out the truth,
Albeit along the precipice's edge.

J. R. LOWELL, A Glance behind the Curtain, l. 251.

They went upward still, and onward, who would Keep ahead of Truth.

J. R. LOWELL, The Present Crisis, l. 87.

Servant of God, well done! well hast thou fought

The better fight, who single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause
Of truth.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. vi, l. 29.

Gentlest and bravest in the battle-brunt—
The Champion of the Truth.

JAMES RYDER RANDALL, John Pelham.

Who never sold the truth to serve the hour,
Nor palter'd with Eternal God for power.
TENNYSON, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, l. 179.

When truth or virtue an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours.

POPE, Epilogue to Satires Dial. i, l. 199

Farewell then, verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What right, what true, what fit, we justly call,
Let this be all my care—for this is all.

POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles Bk. i, epis. 1, l. 17.

And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live!

WORDSWORTH, Ode to Duty, l. 36.

Who tells me true, though in his tale lie
death,

I hear him as he flatter'd.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act i,
sc. 2, l. 102.

All fear of the world or consequence is swallowed up in a manly anxiety to do Truth justice.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 13 Feb., 1838.

Truth before peace. That is my watchword.
MICHEL DE UNAMUNO, Essays and Soliloquies,
p. 138.

It is one thing to wish to have truth on our side, and another to wish sincerely to be on the side of truth.

RICHARD WHATELY, On the Love of Truth.

It is a dangerous grieving of the Spirit when, instead of drawing ourselves to the Spirit, we hasten to draw the Spirit to us.

RICHARD STREZZ, Poems Sealed. (c. 1630)

Or shall we say
That, like the Red-cross Knight, they urge their way,

To lead in unremembered triumph home
Truth, their immortal Ura?

WILLIAM MORRIS, Unremembered. Journal. Pt. i,
No. 22.

IX.—Truth: Its Virtues

No pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage-ground of Truth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Truth.

Certainly it is heaven upon earth to have a man's mind . . . turn upon the poles of truth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Truth.

Is truth ever barren?

BACON, Cogitationes de Scientia Humana.

For truth is precious and divine;
Too rich a pearl for carnal swine.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 2, l. 257.

All truth is precious, if not all divine.

COWPER, Charity, l. 331.

For truth is unwelcome, however divine.

COWPER, The Flaming Mill, l. 23.

Time is precious, but truth is more precious than
time.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Speech, Aylesbury, 11
Sept., 1865

Truth shall restore the light by Nature given,
And, like Prometheus, bring the fire of Heaven! . . .

What! are thy triumphs, sacred Truth, belie'd?

Why then hath Plato lived—or Sidney died?

CAMPBELL, The Pleasures of Hope. Pt. i, l. 415

Individuals may perish; but truth is eternal.

JOSEPH GERALD, Speech, when under arrest,
Jan., 1794.

But there are seven sisters ever serving
Truth,

Porters of the Posterns; one called Abstinence,

Humility, Charity, Chastity be the chief maidens there;

Patience and Peace help many a one;

Lady Almsgiving lets in full many.

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers Plowman. Pt. viii.

There is no veil like light—no adamant armour against hurt like the truth.

GEORGE MACDONALD, Marquis of Lossie. Ch. 71.

Truth, a constant mistress, that Ever protects her servants.

PHILIP MASSINGER, The Great Duke of Florence. Act iii, sc. 1.

In the mountains of truth, you never climb in vain.

NITSCHKE, Human All too Human, l. 358.

Truth never yet fell dead in the streets; it has such affinity with the soul of man, the seed however broadcast will catch somewhere and produce its hundredfold.

THEODORE PARKER, A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.

1 If I had a device, it would be the True, the True only, leaving the Beautiful and the Good to settle matters afterwards as best they could.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Letter to Drury, 9 Dec., 1865.

2 Truth hath a quiet breast.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II Act i, sc. 3, l. 96.

Truth needs no colour, with his colour fix'd;
Beauty no pencil, beauty's truth to lay;
But best is best, if never intermix'd.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets, No. cl.

X—Truth: Its Dangers

3 Truth is often attended with danger. (Peculiar veritati sepe contigua.)

AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, History. Bk. xvi, sec. 1.

4 Truth breeds hatred. (Veritas odium parit.)

BIAS. (AUSONIUS [?], Lusus Septem Sapientum. Sec. 8, l. 3.) Quoted by Terence, Andria, l. 68.

Truth is a narrow lane all full of quags,
Leading to broken heads, abuse, and rage.

JOHN WOLCOT, More Lyric Odes. No. 9.

5 The artlessness of unadorned truth, however sure in theory of extorting admiration, rarely in practice fails inflicting pain and mortification.

FANNY BURNAY, Camilla. Bk. iv, ch. 8.

6 I never saw any good that came of telling truth.

DRYDEN, Amphitryon Act. iii, sc. 1.

7 God offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please,—you can never have both.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Intellect.

Truth stood on one side and Ease on the other; it has often been so.

THEODORE PARKER, A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.

8 Follow not truth too near the heels, lest it dash out thy teeth.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum (1640)

9 Nobody has a right to put another under such a difficulty, that he must either hurt the person by telling the truth, or hurt himself by telling what is not true.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life, 1778.)

Every man has a right to utter what he thinks truth, and every man has a right to knock him down for it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life.)

10 Now comes the pain of truth, to whom 't is pain.

O folly! for to bear all naked truths,

And to envisage circumstance, all calm,
That is the top of sovereignty.

KEATS, Hyperion. Bk. II, l. 202.

11 Not a truth has to art or to science been given,

But brows have ached for it, and souls toil'd and striven;

And many have striven, and many have fail'd,

And many died, slain by the truth they as-sail'd.

OWEN MEREDITH, Lasciv. Pt. II, canto 6, st. 1.

The smallest atom of truth represents some man's bitter toil and agony; for every ponderable chunk of it there is a brave truth-seeker's grave upon some lonely ash-dump and a soul roasting in hell.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser. iii, p. 274.

12 Truth . . . never comes into the world but like a bastard, to the ignominy of him that brought her forth.

JOHN MILTON, Works. Vol. I, p. 276

Still rule those minds on earth
At whom sage Milton's wormwood words were hurled:

*Truth like a bastard comes into the world
Never without ill-fame to him who gives her birth.*

THOMAS HARDY, Lausanne: In Gibbon's Old Garden.

13 Hard are the ways of truth, and rough to walk.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. I, l. 478.

14 And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths,
Win us with honest trifles, to betray 'a
In deepest consequence.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act I, sc. 3, l. 123.

15 I am very fond of truth, but not at all of martyrdom.

VOLTAIRE, Letter to d'Alembert, Feb., 1776.

XI—Truth: The Search for Truth

16 And much they grope for Truth, but never hit, . . .

Yet deem they darkness light and their vain blunders wit.

JAMES BEATTIE, The Minstrel. Bk. I, st. 51.

17 It is the modest, not the presumptuous, inquirer who makes a real and safe progress in the discovery of divine truths.

VISCOUNT BOLINGBROKE, Letter to Mr. Pope.

18 I promised, if you'd watch a dinner out, We'd see truth dawn together?—truth that peeps

Over the glasses' edge when dinner's done,
And body gets its sop and holds its noise

And leaves soul free a little.

ROBERT BROWNING, Fra Lippo Lippi.

1 Every man seeks for truth, but God only knows who has found it.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 Sept., 1747.

And differing judgments serve but to declare,
That Truth lies somewhere, if we knew but where.

COWPER, Hope, l. 423.

Who dares

To say that he alone has found the truth?

LONGFELLOW, John Endicott. Act II, sc. 3.

2 The search after truth, and its eager pursuit, are peculiar to man. (Hominis est propria veri inquisitio atque investigatio.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. i, ch. 4, sec. 13.

Nature has planted in our minds an insatiable longing to see truth. (Natura inest in mentibus nostris insatiabilis quedam cupiditas veri videndi.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. i, ch. 19, sec. 44.

3 Truths that the learn'd pursue with eager thought

Are not important always as dear-bought.

COWPER, Tirocinium, l. 73.

4 One truth discovered is immortal, and entitles its author to be so: for, like a new substance in nature, it cannot be destroyed.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, The Spirit of the Age: Jeremy Bentham.

The man who finds a truth lights a torch.
R. G. INGHAM, The Truth.

5 Truth and seemliness are my study and pursuit, and to that am I wholly given. (Quid verum atque decens curo et rogo et omnis in hoc sum.)

To seek for truth in the groves of Academe. (Inter silvas Academæ querere verum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. ii, ep. 2, l. 45.

6 Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? And when he had said this, he went out again unto the Jews.

New Testament: John, xviii, 38.

Pilate asked, Quid est veritas? And then some other matter took him in the head, and so up he rose and went his way before he had his answer.

LANCELOT ANDREWES, BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, Sermons: Of the Resurrection. (1613)

What is truth? said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Truth.

But what is truth? 'twas Pilate's question, put
To Truth herself, that deign'd him no reply.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. III, l. 270.

7 There are great truths that pitch their shining tents

Outside our walls, and though but dimly seen
In the gray dawn, they will be manifest
When the light widens into perfect day.

LONGFELLOW, Michael Angelo: Pt. iv, In the Coliseum.

8 I seek the truth, whereby no man was ever harmed. (Ζητῶ γὰρ τῆς ἀλήθειας, ὅφ' ἢ οὐδεὶς πώποτε ἐβλάβη.)

MARCUS AURELIUS, Meditations. Bk. vi, sec. 21.

9 Man with his burning soul
Has but an hour of breath
To build a ship of Truth
In which his soul may sail,
Sail on the sea of death;
For death takes toll
Of beauty, courage, youth,
Of all but Truth.

JOHN MASEFIELD, Truth. St. 1.

10 O sir, the truth, the truth! is 't in the skies,
Or in the grass, or in this heart of ours?
But O the truth, the truth! the many eyes
That look on it! the diverse things they see,
According to their thirst for fruit or flowers!
Pass on: it is the truth seek we.

GEORGE MEREDITH, A Ballad of Fair Ladies in Revolt. St. 16

Truths which transcend the searching schoolmen's vein

And half had staggered that stout Stagirite.

CHARLES LAMB, Written at Cambridge. Stagirite, i.e. Aristotle, born at Stagira.

11 Truths would you teach, or save a sinking land?

All fear, none aid you, and few understand.

POPE, Essay on Man. Ep. iv, l. 265.

12 While we are examining into everything, we sometimes find truth where we least expect it. (Dum omnia quærimus, aliquando ad verum, ubi minime expectavimus, pervenimus.)

QUINTILIAN, De Institutione Oratoria. Bk. xii, ch. 8, sec. 3.

13 As painfully to pore upon a book,
To seek the light of truth; while truth the while

Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look.
SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act i, sc. 1, l. 74.

But wonder on, till truth make all things plain.
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act v, sc. 1, l. 129.

14 The golden guess
Is morning-star to the full round of truth.
TENNYSON, Columbus, l. 42.

¹ Who seeks for truth should be of no country.
VOLTAIRE, Réponse, à un Académicien.

XII—Truth: Truth-telling

² Simple are the words of truth. ('Απλά ῥάπ ἰσχύει ἀληθείας ἔργα.)

ÆSCHYLUS, Orestes. Frag. 92.

The language of truth is simple. ('Απλοῦς ὁ μῦθος ῥῆς ἀληθείας ἔργα.)

EURIPIDES, Phænissa, l. 469. Quoted by Seneca (Epistula ad Lucilium, xlix, 4): Veritatis simplex oratio est.

The words of truth are always paradoxical.

LAO-TSE, The Simple Way. No. 78.

The language of truth is unadorned and always simple. (Veritatis absolutus sermo ac semper est simplex.)

AMMIANUS MARCELLINUS, History. Bk. xiv, 10.

³ Truth can never be told so as to be understood, and not be believ'd.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Proverbs of Hell.

⁴ Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed.

Speak truly, and each word of thine

Shall be a fruitful seed.

Live truly, and thy life shall be
A great and noble creed.

HORATIUS BONAR, Be True.

⁵ Truth never hurts the teller.

ROBERT BROWNING, Fifine at the Fair. Sec. 32.

⁶ For fools and mad men tell commonly truth.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. II, sec. 3, mem. 8.

Wilt thou be my fool? for fools, they say, will tell truth.

PHILIP MASSINGER, Very Woman. Act III, sc. 1.

Children and fools speak true.

JOHN LYLY, Endymion, iv, 2.

Fools and babes tell true.

SAMUEL ROWLANDS, More Knaves Yet, 36.

⁷ The fewer the voices on the side of truth, the more distinct and strong must be your own.

WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING, Charge on Ordination of Rev. J. S. Dwight.

Then to side with Truth is noble when we share her wretched crust,

Ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 't is prosperous to be just;

Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside,

Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified.

J. R. LOWELL, The Present Crisis. St. 11.

⁸ No man speaks the truth or lives a true life two minutes together.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. III, p. 455.

When what should be the greatest truths flatter out into shallow truisms, then we are all sick.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. IV, p. 20.

⁹ Wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour.

New Testament: Ephesians, iv, 25.

The highest compact we can make with our fellow is,—Let there be truth between us two forevermore.

14 Use not to lie, for that is unonest; speak not every truth, for that is unneedful; yes, in time and place, a harmless lie is a great deal better than a hurtful truth.

ROGER ASCHAM, Letter to Mr. Howe. (1550)

15 'T is not enough your counsel still be true:
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. III, l. 13.

A truth that's told with bad intent
Beats all the lies you can invent.

WILLIAM BLAKE, Auguries of Innocence.

16 Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that sheweth best by day; but it will not rise to the price of a diamond, or carbuncle, that sheweth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure.

- 2 And, after all, what is a lie? 'Tis but The truth in masquerade.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xi, st. 37.
Truth is only falsehood well disguised.
FARQUHAR, The Constant Couple. Act III, sc. 4.
- 3 The truth is bitter and disagreeable to fools; but falsehood is sweet and acceptable. (Τὸ μὲν ἀληθὲς μισρὸν ἐστὶ καὶ ἀπὸς τοῖς ἀφροῖς τὸ δὲ ψεῦδος γλυκὺ καὶ σπορμπεύει.)
ST. CHRYSOSTOM, Adagia.
- 4 Falsehood is so near to truth that a wise man would do well not to trust himself on the narrow edge. (Ita enim finitima sunt falsa veris ut in præcipitem locum non debeat se sapiens committere.)
CICERO, Academicarum Questionum. Bk. II, sec. 21.
He who has once deviated from the truth, usually commits perjury with as little scruple as he would tell a lie.
CICERO, Pro Quintio Roscio Comædo. Sec. 20.
- 5 Ever to that truth,
Which but the semblance of a falsehood wears,
A man, if possible, should bar his lip.
(Sempre a quel ver ch' ha faccia di menzogna De' l' uom chiuder le labbra.)
DANTE, Inferno. Canto xvi, l. 124.
- 6 For how can that be false, which every tongue
Of every mortal man affirms for true?
SEE JOHN DAVIES, Nasce Triptum. Sec. 32, st. 55.
- 7 Some truth there was, but dashed and brewed with lies,
To please the fools, and puzzle all the wise.
Succeeding times did equal folly call,
Believing nothing, or believing all.

- 10 Half the truth is often a great lie.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1758:
Half-truths to which men are accustomed are

- so much easier to pass than the golden raincoat they rarely encounter!
CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Religio Journalistica, p. 32.
Truths would be tales
Where now half truths be truths.
SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act II, sc. 2, l. 136.
That a lie which is half a truth is ever the blackest of lies,
That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight.
TENNYSON, The Grandmother. St. 8.
- 11 The art of lying is the strongest acknowledgment of the force of truth.
WILLIAM HAZLITT, Table Talk: On Patronage and Puffing.
- 12 He that trusts in a lie shall perish in truth.

I would I could as easily discover the true as I can expose the false. (Utinam tam facile vera invenire possim, quam falsa convincere.)
CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. I, ch. 32, sec. 91.
- 17 A man had rather have a hundred lies told of him, than one truth which he does not wish should be told.
SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life. 1773.)
- 18 I reckon there's more things told than are true,
And more things true than are told!
RUDYARD KIPPLING, Rewards and Fairies: The Ballad of Minnie Shaw.
- 19 Man is ice for truth, fire for falsehood.
(L'homme est de glace aux vérités; Il est de feu pour les mensonges.)
LA FONTAINE, Fables.
- 20 Some falsehood mingles with all truth.
LONGFELLOW, The Golden Legend. Pt. II.
- 21 The nimble lie

Is like the second-hand upon a clock;
We see it fly, while the hour-hand of truth
Seems to stand still, and yet it moves unseen,
And wins at last, for the clock will not strike
Till it has reached the goal.

LONGFELLOW, Michael Angelo. Pt. iii, sec. 5.

But a lie, whatever the guise it wears,
Is a lie, as it was of yore.
And a truth that has lasted a million years
Is good for a million more!

TED OLSON, Things That Endure.

Who speaks the truth stabs Falsehood to the heart,
And his mere word makes despots tremble
more

Than ever Brutus with his dagger could.

J. R. LOWELL, L'Envoi, l. 100.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,

In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side.

J. R. LOWELL, The Present Crisis. St. 5.

Against truth falsehood hath no might.

JOHN LYDGATE, The Story of Thebes. Pt. ii.

Let Truth and Falsehood grapple: who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?

MILTON, Areopagitica.

An innocent truth can never stand in need
Of a guilty lie.

MASSINGER, Emperor of the East. Act v, sc. 3.

Truth never was indebted to a lie.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 587.

For lying is thy sustenance, thy food;
Yet thou pretend'st to truth.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. i, l. 429.

For oh, 't was nits to the Father of Lies,
(As this wily fiend is nam'd in the Bible)
To find it settled by laws so wise

That the greater the truth, the worse the libel!

THOMAS MOORE, A Case of Libel, l. 61.

The greater the truth the greater the libel.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH seems to have originated this saying, about 1789. Robert Burns, in some lines written at Stirling, attributed it to Lord Mansfield.

I love the truth and wish to have it always spoken to me: I hate a liar. (Ego verum amo, verum volo mihi dici; mendacem odi.)

PLAUTUS, Mostellaria, l. 181. (Act i, sc. 3.)

The dull flat falsehood serves for policy;
And in the cunning truth itself 's a lie.

ALEXANDER POPE, Moral Essays. Epn. i, l. 67.

Tell a lie, and find the truth.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 75.

False things may be imagined, and false things composed; but only truth can be invented.

JOHN RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Bk. i, pt. 8,
ch. 4, sec. 23.

They spake truth once—but all the rest was lies,
Lived for an hour—then for all time were dead.

MARGARET SACKVILLE, Resurrection.

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act v, sc. 5, l. 42.

Falsehood flies and truth comes limping after it, so that when men come to be undeceived it is too late.

SWIFT, The Examiner. No. 15.

A lie travels round the world while Truth is putting on her boots.

C. H. SPURGEON, Truth and Falsehood.

A lie travels by the Marconi route, while Truth goes by slow freight and is often ditched at the first water-tank.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Epigrams.

Truth is strengthened by observation and delay, falsehood by haste and uncertainty.
(Veritas visu et mora, falsa festinatione et incertis valescunt.)

TACITUS, Annals. Bk. ii, sec. 39.

Falsehoods which we spurn to-day
Were the truths of long ago.

XV—Truth and Fiction

See also Fiction

Fiction lags after truth, invention is un-fruitful, and imagination cold and barren.

EDMUND BURKE, Thoughts on the Cause of the Present Discontents.

'Tis strange—but true; for truth is always strange,—

Stranger than fiction.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xiv, st. 101.

Truth is stranger than fiction—to some people,
but I am measurably familiar with it.

MARK TWAIN, Pudd'nhead Wilson's New Calendar.

Truth, fact, is the life of all things; falsity,
"fiction," or whatever it may call itself, is certain to be the death.

CARLYLE, Letter-Day Pamphlets. No. 8.

When fiction rises pleasing to the eye,
Men will believe, because they love the lie;
But Truth herself, if clouded with a frown,

Must have some solemn proof to pass her down.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, Epistle to Hogarth, l. 291.

1 I love truth. I believe humanity has need of it. But assuredly it has much greater need still of the untruth which flatters it, consoles it, gives it infinite hopes. (J'aime la vérité. Je crois que l'humanité en a besoin; mais, certes, elle a bien plus grand besoin encore du mensonge qui la flatte, la console, lui donne des espérances infinies.)

ANATOLE FRANCE, La Vie en Fleur.

2 Never will the imagination approach the improbabilities and the antitheses of truth.

EDMOND AND JULES DE GONCOURT, Journal. Vol. II, p. 9.

At times truth may not seem probable. (Le vrai peut quelquefois n'être pas vraisemblable.)

BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Pt. III, l. 48.

3 And Truth severe, by fairy Fiction drest.

THOMAS GRAY, The Bard, l. 127.

4 Fictions meant to please should be very close to truth. (Ficta voluptatis causa sint proxima veris.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 338.

5 If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act III, sc. 4, l. 140.

6 There is nothing so powerful as truth, and often nothing so strange.

DANIEL WEBSTER, Speech: Murder of Captain White.

7 Nothing can satisfy, but what confounds; Nothing, but what astonishes, is true.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night IX, l. 836.

TURKEY AND THE TURKS

8 Know ye the land where the cypress and myrtle

Are emblems of deeds that are done in their clime,

Where the rage of the vulture, the love of the turtle

Now melt into sorrow, now madden to crime? . . .

Where the virgins are soft as the roses they twine,

And all save the spirit of man is divine?

BYRON, The Bride of Abydos. Canto I, st. 1.

9 The unspeakable Turk should be immediately struck out of the question.

CARLYLE, Letter to a Meeting at St. James's Hall, 1876.

10 Let the Turks carry away their abuses in the only possible manner, namely by carrying off themselves. Their zapichs and their mudirs, their bimbashes and their yuzbashis, their kaimekans and their pashas,—one and all, bag and baggage, shall, I hope, clear out from the province they have desolated and profaned.

GLADSTONE, Speech, 7 May, 1877, on the occupation of Bulgaria by Turkey.

Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat; though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act III, sc. 2, l. 169.

10a At midnight, in his guarded tent,

The Turk was dreaming of the hour

When Greece, her knee in supplication bent, Should tremble at his power.

FITZ-GREENE HALLECK, Marco Bozaris.

11 One of that saintly murderous brood To carnage and the Koran given.

THOMAS MOORE, Lalla Rookh: The Fire-Worshippers.

12 [The Ottoman Empire] has the body of a sick old man, who tried to appear healthy, although his end was near.

SIR THOMAS ROE, Ambassador to Constantinople, 1621. (BUCHANAN, Letters, p. 375.)

[The Ottoman Empire] whose sick body was not supported by a mild and regular diet, but by a powerful treatment, which continually exhausted it.

MONTESQUIEU, Persian Letters. Bk. I, No. 19.

We have on our hands a sick man,—a very sick man.

NICHOLAS I OF RUSSIA, Conversation with Sir George Hamilton Seymour, 1853. (Blue Book, 1854.) Hence "The sick man of Europe," as referring to the Turk.

13 I would send them to the Turk, to make eunuchs of.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well. Act II, sc. 3, l. 94.

Go to Constantinople and take the Turk by the beard.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act V, sc. 2, l. 222.

In woman, out-paramoured the Turk.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act III, sc. 4, l. 94.

An you be not turned Turk, there's no more sailing by the star.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act III, sc. 4, l. 57.

14 The Sublime Porte. (Bab-i-ali.)

The official title of the central office of the Ottoman empire under the sultans.

The lofty gate of the royal tent.

MAHOMET II, referring to the ancient place of audience. The Italians translated the phrase "La porte sublima." (CREASY, History of the Ottoman Turks, p. 96.)

TWILIGHT

See also Evening, Sunset

When twilight's curtain, spreading far,
Was pinned with a single star.

MACDONALD CLARKE, Death in Disguise, l. 227.

New twilight lets her curtain down
And pins it with a star.

LYDIA MARIA CHILD. When Macdonald Clarke died in 1842, Mrs. Child wrote an appreciation of his work, in which she misquoted his lines as above, and the misquotation became the more widely accepted rendering.

Day bath put on his jacket, and around
His burning bosom buttoned it with stars.

O. W. HOLMES, Evening: By a Tailor, l. 1.

Night was drawing and closing her curtain.

RECHTER, Flower, Frost, and Thorn Pieces.
Bk. I, ch. 2.

How lovely are the portals of the night,
When stars come out to watch the daylight die.

THOMAS COLE, Twilight.

The lengthening shadows wait
The first pale stars of twilight.

O. W. HOLMES, Even-Song, St. 6.

Parlour twilight: such a gloom
Suits well the thoughtful or unthinking mind.
Coverly, The Task, Bk. iv, l. 278.

Spirit of Twilight, through your folded wings
I catch a glimpse of your averted face,
And rapturous on a sudden, my soul sings
"Is not this common earth a holy place?"
OLIVIA COSTANCE, Twilight.

From that high mount of God, whence light and shade
Spring both, the face of brightest Heav'n had chang'd
To grateful twilight.

MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. v, l. 640.

Dreary twilight.

MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. I, l. 597.

Our lady of the twilight,
She hath such gentle hands,
So lovely are the gifts she brings
From out the sunset-lands,
So bountiful, so merciful,
So sweet of soul is she;

And over all the world she draws
Her cloak of charity.

ALFRED NORTON, Our Lady of the Twilight.

When I was young the twilight seemed too long.

A. MARY F. REMONDON, Twilight.

Twilight's soft down spread o'er the village even,
With magic tips to harmonize the scene.

Still'd is the hum that thro' the hamlet broke,
When round the ruins of their ancient oak
The peasants flock'd to hear the minstrel play,

And games and carols closed the busy day.

SAMUEL ROBERTS, Pleasures of Memory Pt. I, l. 1.

Twilight, a timid fawn, went glimmering by,
And Night, the dark-blue hunter, followed fast.

GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL, Refuge.

Dusk wraps the village in its dim caress;
Each chimney's vapour, like a thin grey rod,
Mounting aloft through miles of quietness,
Pillars the skies of God.

GEORGE WILLIAM RUSSELL, Dusk.

Twilight, ascending slowly from the east,
Entwined in dusky wreaths her braided locks
O'er the fair front and radiant eyes of day:
Night followed, clad with stars.

SWELLEY, Alastor, l. 337.

TYRANNY

Of all the tyrants that the world affords,
Our own affections are the fiercest lords.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Julius Caesar.

Think'st thou there is no tyranny but that
Of blood and chains? The despotism of vice,
The weakness and the wickedness of luxury,
The negligence, the apathy, the evils
Of sensual sloth—produce ten thousand tyrants,
Whose delegated cruelty surpasses

The worst acts of one energetic master,
However harsh and hard in his own bearing

BYRON, Sardanapalus, Act I, sc. 2, l. 113

The worst tyrants are those which establish themselves in our own breasts.

W. E. CHANNING, Spiritual Freedom.

A usurper always distrusts the whole world.
(Usurpator diffida Di tutti sempre.)

ALFREDI, Politica, Act III, sc. 2.

The tyrant now

Trusts not to man: nightly within his chamber
The watch-dog guards his couch, the only friend
He now dare trust.

JOANNA BAILEY, Elkwood Pt. II, act v, sc. 3.

Only tyrants need always be in fear. (Il n'appartient qu'aux tyrans d'être toujours en crainte.)
HENRY IV OF FRANCE. (HARDOUTIN DE PERRE-FICHE.)

Fear, that reigns with the tyrant.

LONGFELLOW, Evangeline, Pt. I, l. 35.

Tyrants' fears

Decrease not, but grow faster than the years.

SHAKESPEARE, Pericles, Act I, sc. 2, l. 84.

For tyrants make man good beyond himself:
Hate to their rule, which else would die away,
Their daily-practis'd chafings keep alive.

MARTIN ARNOLD, Maroon, l. 42.

All oppressors . . . attribute the frustration of their desires to the want of sufficient rig-

our, Then they redouble the efforts of their impotent cruelty.

EDMUND BURKE, Impeachment of Warren Hastings, 16 Feb., 1788.

I impeach him in the name of the people of India, whose rights he has trodden under foot, and whose country he has turned into a desert. Lastly, in the name of human nature itself, in the name of both sexes, in the name of every age, in the name of every rank, I impeach the common enemy and oppressor of all.

EDMUND BURKE, Impeachment of Warren Hastings: Peroration. This is the version given by Macaulay in his essay on Warren Hastings. It is much swifter and more brilliant than the original, and hence has become more familiar.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter to Thomas Mercer, 26 Feb., 1790. See also under PEOPLE.

² A tyrant is the best sacrifice to Jupiter, as the ancients held.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. ii, sec. iii, mem. 1, subs. 1.

³ Can despots compass aught that hails their sway?

Or call with truth one span of earth their own,

Save that wherein at last they crumble bone by bone?

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto i, st. 42.

Here all the mighty trouble of the earth,
Who swam to sov'reign rule through seas of blood;

Th' oppressive, sturdy, man-destroying villains,
Who ravag'd kingdoms, and laid empires waste. . . .

Now, like a storm that's spent, Lie hush'd.

ROBERT BLAIR, The Grave, l. 208.

⁴ Tyranny Is far the worst of treasons.

BYRON, The Two Foscari. Act ii, sc. 1.

⁵ Is there no tyrant but the crowned one? (N'est-on jamais tyran qu'avec un diadème?)

ANDRÉ CHÉNIER, Caius Gracchus.

⁶ I deem the tyrant happy who dies a natural death.

CHILON. (DIOGENES LAËRTIUS, Chilon. Sec. 5.)

Tremble, ye tyrants, for ye can not die. (Tremblez, tyrans, vous êtes immortels.)

⁸ He who allows oppression shares the crime.

ERASMUS DARIUS, The Botanic Garden. Pt. ii, canto 3, l. 438.

⁹ Nature has left this tincture in the blood,
That all men would be tyrants if they could.

DANIEL DEFOE, The Kentish Petition: Addenda, l. 11.

Slaves would be tyrants if the chance were theirs.

VICTOR HUGO, The Vanished City.

There are few minds to which tyranny is not delightful.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Letters. Vol. ii, p. 110.

¹⁰ O slavish man! will you not bear with your own brother, who has God for his Father, as being a son from the same stock, and of the same high descent? But if you chance to be placed in some superior station, will you presently set yourself up for a tyrant?

EPICTETUS, Discourses. Bk. i, ch. 13, sec. 3.

¹¹ A state has no worse foe than a tyrant, under whom can be no common laws; but one ruler, keeping the law in his own hands, so that equality perishes.

EURIPIDES, Suppliants, l. 429.

Where law ends, tyranny begins.

WILLIAM PITT, Speech, 9 Jan., 1770.

To live by one man's will became the cause of all men's misery.

4 A pine bench, with Mark Hopkins at one end of it and me at the other, is a good enough college for me!

JAMES ABRAHAM GARFIELD, Address, at a Williams College alumni dinner, at Delmonico's,
New York, 28 Dec., 1871. (WASHINGTON GLADSTONE, Recollections, p. 73.) Differing versions of Garfield's speech are given in Hinsdale's President Garfield and Education,
p. 43; the Williams Videlite, 27 Jan., 1872, and the Williams Review, 5 Feb., 1872. (See STEVENSON, Famous Single Poems, rev. ed., ch. 19.) A movement had been started to provide new buildings for the college, and Garfield, who had been a student there under Mark Hopkins, contended that a distinguished and well-paid faculty was far more essential. His words are usually quoted,
"A university is a student on one end of a log and Mark Hopkins on the other." Abraham Flexner in Universities (p. 151), attributes the saying to Hopkins himself, as, "The ideal college consists of a log of wood with an instructor at one end and a student at the other"; but it has not been found in Hopkins's works, and evidently derives from Garfield, who, in turn, was echoing Hopkins's own disdain of apparatus of any kind, even of books. In his Lectures on Moral Science (p. 39), he says that, for this subject at least, "no learning is needed, no science, no apparatus, no information from distant countries." See also APPENDIX, p. 2297:3.

²¹Friends and loves we have none, nor wealth,
Nor blest abode.

JOHN MARSHFIELD, The Seekers. See 2103:1.

An ardent throng, we have wandered long,

We have searched the centuries through,

In hunting pride, we have fought and died,

To keep its memory true.

We fight and die, but our hopes beat high,

In spite of the toil and tears,

For we catch the gleam of our vanished dream
Down the path of the Untrod Years.

WILMA KIRK McFARLAND, The Untrod Years.
O'ermy sons of Jacob, to fret and toiling tied,
We grudge you not the birthright for which your father died;

We own the right of roaming, and the world is wide.

How the hell can I work when there's no work
to do?
Hallelujah, I'm a bum, hallelujah, bum again,
Hallelujah, give us a hand-out to revive us
again.

UNKNOWN, Hallelujah, I'm a Bum. There are several versions of this song.
This old song, heard at the water tanks of railroads in Kansas in 1897 and from harvest hands who worked in the wheat fields of Pawnee County, was picked up later by the I. W. W.'s, who made verses of their own for it and gave it wide fame.

VALENTINE

8 How different from our dreary fashion
Of playing little games with passion,
The flippant and ironic mode
Of using love as episode,
Of chinning to the fourteenth line
To make a trivial valentine.

JOSEPH AULANDER, Letter to Emily Dickinson.

9 For this was on St. Valentine's day,
When every fowl cometh there to choose his mate.

CHADDER, The Parliament of Fowles, l. 309.
When you hear the birds call for their mates,
Ask if it be St. Valentine, their coupling day.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Thierry and Theodores. Act iii, sc. 3, l.

Saint Valentine is past;
Begin these wood-birds but to couple now?
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act iv, sc. 1, l. 143.

Upon Friday is Saint Valentine's Day, and every bird chooseth him a mate.
UNKNOWN, Poison Letters, iii, 169.

7 Muse, bid the Morn awake!
Sad Winter now declines,
Each bird doth choose a mate;
This day's Saint Valentine's.
MICHAEL DRAYTON, To His Valentine.

8 Last Valentine, the day when birds of kind
Their paramours with mutual chirpings find.
JOHN GAY, Shepherd's Week: Thursday, l. 37.

9 Oft have I heard both youths and virgins say, Birds choose their mates, and couple too, this
day:

But by their flight I never can divine
When I shall couple with my Valentine.
ROBERT HERRICK, To His Valentine.

10 Oh, if it be to choose and call thee mine,
Love, thou art every day my Valentine!
THOMAS HOOD, For the Fourteenth of February.

11 Hail to thy returning festival, old Bishop Valentine! Great is thy name in the rubric, thou venerable Archflamen of Hymen! Immortal Go-between; who and what manner of person art thou? Art thou but a name, typifying the restless principle which impels poor humans to seek perfection in union? or wert thou indeed a mortal prelate, with thy tippet and thy rochet, thy apron on, and decent lawn sleeves? Mysterious personage!
like unto thee, assuredly, there is no other mitred father in the calendar.

CHARLES LAMB, Essays of Elia: Valentine's Day.

Thou comest attended with thousands and ten thousands of little Loves. . . Singing Cupids are thy choristers and thy preceptors; and instead of the crossier, the mystical arrow is borne before thee. . .

This is the day on which those charming little miesives, ycleped Valentines, cross and inter-cross each other at every street and turning. The weary and all forsopt twopenny postman sinks beneath a load of delicate embarrassments, not his own. . . In these little visual interpretations, no emblem is so common as the heart—that little three-cornered exponent of all our hopes and fears,—the beak and bleeding heart. . .

Good-morrow to my Valentine, sings poor Oph-elia, and no better wish, but with better auspices, we wish to all faithful lovers, who are not too wise to despise old legends, but are content to rank themselves humble diocessans of old Bishop Valentine and his true church.

CHARLES LAMB, Essays of Elia: Valentine's Day.

12 Called out in the morning by Mr. Moore, whose voice my wife hearing in my dressing-chamber with me, got herself ready, and came down and challenged him for her valentine.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 14 Feb., 1660. It was a common practice in England to choose a sweetheart or special friend for the ensuing year, on St. Valentine's day, and the lady in the case of course expected a gift. (See Passion Letters, ii, 24.)

Here Mrs. The. shewed me my name upon her breast as her Valentine, which will cost me 70s.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 3 March, 1663.

By and by comes Mrs. Pierce, with my name in her bosom for her Valentine, which will cost me money.

SAMUEL PEPYS, Diary, 15 Feb., 1666.

To-morrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime.

And I a maid at your window,
To be your Valentine.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iv, sc. 5, l. 48.

The rose is red, the violet's blue,
Pinks are sweet, and so are you.

UNKNOWN, A Rhyme for St. Valentine's Day.

The American version is usually, "Sugar is sweet, and so are you."

He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubbed, can lose no honour by't.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. I, canto 3, l. 1041.

Never had valour, no not ours, before
Done aught like this upon the land or main:
Where not to be o'ercome was to do more
Than all the conquests former kings did gain.

DRYDEN, Annus Mirabilis. St. 80.

Valor consists in the power of self-recovery.

EMERSON, Rays, First Series: Circles.

'Tis still observed those men most valiant are
Who are most modest ere they came to war.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Courage.

Our valours are our best gods.

JOHN FLETCHER, Bondswoman.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 43.

Valour that parleys is near yielding.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

All honor to you in your valor, as says the godlike phrase of Cato. (Macte Virtute esto, inquit sententia diva Catonis.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. i, sat. 2, l. 31.

Fear to do base unworthy things, is valour;
If they be done to us, to suffer them
Is valour too.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.

I never thought an angry person vallant. . . .
No man is valianter by being angry.
But he that could not valiant be without.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.

That valour lies in the eyes o' the lookers on,
And is called valour with a witness.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.

The things true valour's exercised about
Are poverty, restraint, captivity,
Banishment, loss of children, long disease:
The least is death. . . . So a mind affecting
Or undertaking dangers for ambition. . . .
Deserves the name of daring, not of valour.
And over-daring is as great a vice
As over-fearing. . . . A valiant man
Ought not to undergo, or tempt a danger,
But worthily, and by selected ways:
He undertakes with reason, not by chance.
His valour is the salt to his other virtues,
They are all unseasoned without it.

BEN JONSON, The New Inn. Act iv, sc. 3.

Rivalry in valor spurred them on. (Stimulus dedit æmula virtus)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. I, l. 120.

More childish valorous than manly wise.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE, Tamburlane. Pt. I, act iv, sc. 1.

Instead of rage
Deliberate valour breath'd, firm and unmov'd
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. i, l. 533.

No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argued fear; each on himself relied,
As only in his arm the moment lay
Of victory.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. vi, l. 236.

In vain doth valour bleed
While Avarice and Rapine share the land.

MILTON, Sonnet: To the Lord General Fairfax.

Valor has its limits, like the other virtues.
(La vaillance a ses limites, comme les autres vertus.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. I, ch. 14.

You will find many men most unjust, most impious, most intemperate, and most ignorant, yet extremely valourous.

PLATO, Protagoras. Sec. 349.

Valour, destitute of other virtues, cannot render a man worthy of any true esteem. . . . A man may be very valiant, and yet impious and vicious.

5 What valour were it, when a cur doth grin, For one to thrust his hand between his teeth, When he might spurn him with his foot away?

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act i, sc. 4, l. 56.

He's truly valiant that can suffer wisely The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs

His outsidings, to wear them like his raiment, carelessly;

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart To bring it into danger.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act iii, sc. 5, l. 31.

6 Virtue is of so little regard in these costermonger times that true valour is turned bear-herd.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act i, sc. 2, l. 191.

7 My valour is certainly going!—it is sneaking off!—I feel it oozing out, as it were, at the palms of my hands.

SHERIDAN, The Rivals. Act v, sc. 3.

8 Valor, gradually overpowered by the delicious poison of sloth, grows torpid. (Blandoque veneno Desidia virtus paulatim evicta senescit.)

15 They are the weakest-minded and the hardest hearted men, that most love variety and change.

JOHN RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Bk. ii, pt. II,
ch. 6, sec. 7.

16 Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feed; but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies: for vilest things Become themselves in her; that the holy priests

Bless her when she is riggish.
SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act II,
sc. 2, l. 240.

VENGEANCE, see Revenge

VENICE

17 The gods returned to earth when Venice broke
Like Venus from the dawn-encircled sea.
Wide laughed the skies with light when Venice woke
Crowned of antiquity.
WILLIAM ROSE BENTZ, Gaspara Stampa.
18 I stood in Venice, on the Bridge of Sighs,
A palace and a prison on each hand;

I saw from out the wave her structures rise
As from the stroke of the enchanter's wand:
A thousand years their cloudy wings expand
Around me, and a dying Glory smiles
O'er the far times, when many a subject land
Look'd to the winged Lion's marble pile,
Where Venice sate in state, throned on her hundred isles!

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 1.

She looks a sea Cybele, fresh from ocean,
Rising with her tiara of proud towers
At airy distance, with majestic motion,
A ruler of the waters and their powers.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 2.

In Venice Tasso's echoes are no more,
And silent rows the songless gondolier;
Her palaces are crumbling to the shore,
And music meets not always now the ear;
Those days are gone, but Beauty still is here;
States fall, arts fade, but Nature doth not die,
Nor yet forget how Venice once was dear,
The pleasant place of all festivity,
The revel of the earth, the masque of Italy!

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto iv, st. 3.

O happy streets! to rumbling wheels unknown,
No carts, no coaches, shake the floating town!
JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 99.

White swan of cities, slumbering in thy nest
So wonderfully built among the reeds
Of the lagoon, that fences thee and feeds,
As sayeth thy old historian and thy guest!
LONGFELLOW, Venice.

Be thou perpetual! (Esto perpetua!)
PIETRO SARDI, Dying Apostrophe to Venice, 15
Jan., 1623.

Many a time and oft
In the Rialto you have rated me.
SHAKESPEARE, Merchant of Venice, 1, 3, 108.

Once did She hold the gorgeous east in fee;
And was the safeguard of the west: the worth

Of Venice did not fall below her birth,
Venice, the eldest Child of Liberty.
She was a maiden City, bright and free;
No guile seduced, no force could violate;
And, when she took unto herself a Mate,
She must espouse the everlasting Sea. . . .
Men are we, and must grieve when even the Shade

Of that which once was great is passed away.
WORDSWORTH, On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic.

VENUS

Is Venus odious to brides? Or do they mock the joy of their parents with false tears?
(Estne novis nuptis odio Venus atque paren-tum Frustrantur falsis gaudia lacrimulis?)
CATULLUS, Odes. No. lxi, l. 15.

Venus will not charm so much without her attendant Graces, as they will without her.
LORD CRESTFIELD, Letters, 18 Nov., 1748.

Wot's the good o' callin' a young 'ooman a
Venus or a angel, Sammy?

CHARLES DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 33.

Now the Graces are four and the Venuses two,
And ten is the number of Muses;
For a Muse and a Grace and a Venus are you,
My dear little Molly Trefusis!

AUSTIN DOBSON, Molly Trefusis. See 820:2.

Creator Venus, genial pow'r of Love,
The bliss of men below, and gods above,
Beneath the sliding sun thou runn'st thy race,
Dost fairest shine, and best become thy place.
For thee the winds their eastern blasts for-
bear,

Thy month reveals the spring, and opens all the year.

Thee, Goddess, thee the storms of winter fly,
Earth smiles with flowers renewing; laughs
the sky.

DRYDEN, Palamon and Arcite. Bk. iii, l. 129.

Venus, thy eternal sway
All the race of men obey.
EURIPIDES, Iphigenia at Aulis, l. 545.

Venus . . . that made herself as common as a barber's chair.

STEPHEN GOSSON, Schools of Abuse, 66. (1579)

Venus, a notorious strumpet, as common as a barber's chair.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt.
i, sec. 4, mem. 1. See also under BARBER.

But she that is the source and well
Of weal or woe.

JOHN GOWER, Confessio Amantis. Bk. iv, l. 147.

Golden Aphrodite the Cyprian, who stirs up sweet passion in the gods and subdues the tribes of mortal men and birds that fly in the air and all the many creatures that the dry land rears, and all that the sea: all these love the deeds of rich-crowned Cytherea.

Cruel mother of the Cupids. (Mater sæva Cupidinum.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 19; bk. iv, ode 1.

Venus, who loves to force, with cruel humor, immated minds and bodies beneath her brazen yoke.
([Venus] cui placet impares Formas atque animos sub Jugu sæva Sævo mittere cum joco.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 33, l. 10.

Thou, O Venus, art sole mistress of the nature of things, and without thee nothing rises up into the divine realms of life, nothing grows to be lovely or glad.

LIBERATION, De Rerum Natura. Bk. 1, sec. 1.
(Munro, tr.)

Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act. IV. sc. 1, l. 8.

Lo, this is she that was the world's delight;
The old grey years were parcels of her might;
The strewings of the ways wherein she trod
Were the twain seasons of the day and night.

SWINBURNE, Laus Venere. St. 3.

Lo, she was thus when her clear limbs enticed
All lips that now grow sad with kissing Christ.

SWINBURNE, Laus Venere. St. 4.

Behold, my Venus, my soul's body, lies
With my love laid upon her garment-wise,
Feeling my love in all her limbs and hair
And shed between her eyelids through her eyes.

SWINBURNE, Laus Venere. St. 8.

Where each the virtue or begins the vice.

Pope, Essay on Man. Epist. II, l. 209

4 I delight in the law of God after the inward man; but I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin.

New Testament: Romans, vii, 22, 23.

5 Vices creep into our hearts under the name of virtues. (Vitia nobis sub virtutum nomine obrepunt.)

SENeca, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epist. xiv, sec. 2.

There are vices which are next door to virtues.
(Sunt virtutibus vitia confinia.)

SENeca, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epist. cxi, sec. 8.

6 He conquered by weapons, but was conquered
by his vices. (Armis vicit, vitiis victus est.)

SENeca, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epist. II, sec. 6.

Referring to Hannibal.

Hannibal, as he had mighty virtues, so had he many vices. . . . He had two distinct persons in him.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy:
Democritus is the Reader.

Man is not truly one, but truly two.

R. L. STEVENSON, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

I feel two natures struggling within me.

GEORGE GERT BERNARD. Title of Wainwright group.

7 Vices are so interwoven with virtues that they drag the virtues along with them. (Vitia virtutibus inmissa sunt, ut has secum tractant sint.)

SENeca, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epist. cxi, sec. 13.

8 Some rise by sin, and some by virtue fall

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure. Act II, sc.
1, l. 38.

9 Virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue.

VICTORIA, QUEEN

12 'Ave you 'eard o' the Widow at Windsor
With a hairy gold crown on 'er 'ead?

She 'as ships on the foam—she 'as millions at home,

An' she pays us poor beggars in red

RODYARD KIPLING, The Widow at Windsor.

Walk wide o' the Widow at Windsor,

For 'alf o' Creation she owns:

We 'ave bought 'er the same with the sword an'
the flame,

An' we've salted it down with our bones.

RODYARD KIPLING, The Widow at Windsor

13 An oval, placid woman who assuaged men's lives;

Her comely hands wrought forth a century
Of oval, placid women who engaged, as wives,
In broderies and tea.

RUTH MASON RICE, Victoria.

14 Her court was pure; her life serene;

God gave her peace; her land reposed;

A thousand claims to reverence closed

In her as Mother, Wife, and Queen.

TENNYSON, To the Queen. St. 7.

An age waiting in moral grandeur and spiritual health.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Sohrab and Rustum: Preface.

Blessed period of peace and prosperity, port and progeny and domesticity as excalibur from Buckingham Palace to Bloomsbury Square and brand-new Bayswater. Despite its limitations, it was a good, solid, happy time of English life at its best
S. M. ELLIS, Mainly Victorian. Referring to the Victorian era.

15 There are no Victorias in the twentieth century who have the right to say "We are not amused."

GREENWOOD. (Saturday Review, 7 Feb., 1901.)

18 Speak, History! who are Life's victors? Un-roll thy long annals and say,

Are they those whom the world called the victors,—who won the success of a day?

The martyrs, or Nero? The Spartans, who fell at Thermopylae's tryst,

Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges, or Socrates? Pilate, or Christ?

WILLIAM WEYMORE STORY, 10 Victs.

They only the victory win

Who have fought the good fight and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within;

Who have held to their faith unswayed by the price that the world holds on high;

Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist,

fight—if need be, to die.

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, ep. 18, l. 100.

Although virtue receives some of its excellencies from nature, yet it is perfected by education. (Virtus, etiamsi quosdam impetus a natura sumit, tamis perficienda doctrina est.)

QUINTILIUS, De Institutione Oratoria. Bk. xii, ch. 2, sec. 1.

3 Virtue is a habit of the mind, consistent with nature and moderation and reason.

CICERO, De Inventione Rhetorica. Bk. ii, sec. 53.

4 Is virtue a thing remote? I wish to be virtuous, and lo! virtue is at hand.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. vii, ch. 29.

5 We fancy it rhetoric when we speak of eminent virtue. We do not yet see that virtue is Height.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

Virtue is the adherence in action to the nature of things, and the nature of things makes it prevalent. It consists in a perpetual substitution of being for seeming, and with sublime propriety God is described as saying, I AM.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Spiritual Laws.

6 Virtue is a mean between vices, remote from both extremes. (Virtus est medium vitiorum et utrumque reductum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, ep. 18, l. 9.

7 Can you suppose that virtue consists of words merely? (Virtutum verba putas?)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, ep. 6, l. 31.

Virtue's but a word; Fortune rules all.

MASINGER, The Bashful Lover. Act iv, sc. 1.

8 Virtue is often merely local.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler. No. 53.

So much are the modes of excellence settled by time and place, that men may be heard boasting in one street of that which they would anxiously conceal in another.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler. No. 271.

9 Wisdom is knowing what to do next; virtue is doing it.

DAVID STARR JORDAN, The Philosophy of Despair, p. 37.

10 Virtue is the health of the soul. It gives a flavor to the smallest leaves of life. (La vertu est la santé de l'âme. Elle fait trouver de la saveur aux moindres feuilles de la vie.)

JOUBERT, Pensées. No. 131.

Virtue is to the soul what health is to the body. (La sagesse est à l'âme ce que la santé est pour le corps.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes Posthumes. No. 541.

11 Virtue is an angel, but she is a blind one, and must ask of Knowledge to show her the pathway that leads to her goal.

HORACE MANN, A Few Thoughts for a Young Man.

12 Virtue is the fount whence honour springs.

MARLOWE, Tamburlaine. Pt. i, act v, sc. 2.

13 Virtue is harmony. (Τὴν ὁ ἀρετὴν ἀρμονία.)

PYTHAGORAS (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Pythagoras Bk. viii, sec. 33.)

14 Virtue is beauty; but the beautiful evil Are empty trunks o'erflourish'd by the devil. SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 403.

15 Virtue consists, not in abstaining from vice, but in not desiring it.

BERNARD SHAW, Maxims for Revolutionists.

16 Virtue, the greatest of all monarchies.

SWIFT, To the Hon. Sir William Temple.

17 What, what is virtue, but repose of mind?

A pure ethereal calm that knows no storm, Above the reach of wild ambition's wind, Above those passions that this world deform JAMES THOMSON, The Castle of Indolence Canto i. st. 16.

18 Virtue's a stronger guard than brass.

EDMUND WALLER, Epigram Upon the Golden Medal, l. 14.

II—Virtue: Apothegma

19 It is not enough merely to possess virtue, as if it were an art; it should be practised. (Nec vero habere virtutem satis est, quasi artem aliquam, nisi utare.)

CICERO, De Republica. Ch. i, sec. 2.

Virtue is not left to stand alone. He who practices it will have neighbors.

CONFUCIUS, Analects. Bk. iv, ch. 25.

Virtue, if not in action, is a vice; And when we move not forward, we go backward.

MASINGER, The Maid of Honour Act i. sc. 1.

I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for,
not without dust and heat.

MILTON, Areopagitica.

It is the stain and disgrace of the age to envy virtue. (Est hæc sæculi labes quædam et macula virtuti invidere.)

CICERO, Pro L. Cornelio Balbo Sec. 6.

A man that hath no virtue in himself, ever envieth virtue in others

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Envy.

Virtue when concealed hath no value. (Vile latens virtus.)

CLAUDIAN, *Panegyricus de Quarto Consulatu
Honorii Augusti*, l. 222.

Is it a world to hide virtues in?

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act i, sc. 3, l. 140.

Ye were not formed to live the life of brutes,
But virtue to pursue, and knowledge high.
(Fatti non foste a viver come bruti, Ma per seguir virtute e conoscenza.)

DANTE, Inferno. Canto xxvi, l. 119.

The highest virtue is always against the law.
EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Worship.

All the devils respect virtue.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Spiritual Laws.

Hast thou virtue? acquire also the graces and beauties of virtue.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1733.

Sell not virtue to purchase wealth, nor liberty to purchase power.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

The greatest offence against virtue is to speak ill of it.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Essays: On Cant.

Virtue best loves those children that she beats.

ROBERT HERRICK, Hesperides. No. 822.

We hate Virtue while it lives, and mourn it only when it is snatched from sight. (Virtutem incolorem odimus, Sublatam ex oculis querimus.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode xxiv, l. 31.

Friendly to Virtue alone and to its friends. (Uni æquus Virtuti atque ejus amicis.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. ii, sat. 1, l. 70.

Where does virtue go to lodge? (Où la vertu va-t-elle se nicher?)

MONTAIGNE, Remark, when shown the cots in a prison.

No way is barred to virtue. (Invis virtuti nulla est via.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xiv, l. 213.

Nature has placed nothing so high that virtue can not reach it. (Nihil tam alte natura constituit quo virtus non possit emul.)

QUINTUS CURTIUS RUFINUS, *De Rebus Gestis
Alexandri Magni*. Bk. vii, ch. 11, sec. 10.

The virtue which lies hidden unrecognized in times of prosperity, asserts itself in adversity.
(Quæ latet inque bonis cessat non cognita rebus, Apparet virtus arguiturque malis.)

OVID, Tristia. Bk. iv, eleg. 3, l. 79. See also PROSPERITY AND ADVERSITY.

Let them [the wicked] look on virtue and pine away because they have lost her. (Virtutem videant intabescantque relicta.)

PERSIUS, Satires. Sat. iii, l. 38.

Virtue, if she could be seen, would win great love and affection.

PLATO. (BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. ii.)

Conquer by means of virtue. (Vincite Virtute vera.)

PLAUTUS, Casina: Prologue, l. 87.

Virtue, like a strong and hardy plant, takes root in any place, if she finds there a generous nature and a spirit that shuns no labor.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Demosthenes. Sec. 1.

To virtue no way ever happens ill.

FRANCIS ROUS, Thule.

Assume a virtue, if you have it not.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 160.

Virtue may be gay, yet with dignity. (Hila-risque tamen cum pondere virtus.)

STATIUS, Sylvæ. Bk. ii, sec. 3, l. 65.

Stay, Worldling, stay; whither away so fast?
Hark, hark awhile to Virtue's counsels current!

JOSHUA SYLVESTER, Spectacles.

Learn virtue and true labor from me, O youth;
fortune from others. (Disce, puer, virtutem ex me, verumque laborum; Fortunam ex aliis.)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. xii, l. 435.

Virtue debases itself in justifying itself. (La vertu s'avilit à se justifier.)

VOLTAIRE, Œdipe. Act i, sc. 4.

III—Virtue: Its Beauty

The chief good is the exercise of virtue in a perfect life.

ARISTOTLE. (DIOGENES LAËRTIUS, Aristotle. Bk.
v, sec. 30.)

Virtue alone is the unerring sign of a noble soul. (La vertu d'un cœur noble est la marque certaine.)

BOILEAU, Satires. No. v, l. 42.

Virtue is not malicious; wrong done her
Is righted even when men grant they err.

CHAPEMAN, Monks of D'Olive. Act i, sc. 1, l. 127.

Virtue loves herself, for she best knows herself and realizes how lovable she is. (Amans sui virtus, optime enim se ipsa novit quanque sit intellegit.)

CICERO, De Amicitia. Ch. xvi, sec. 98.

The only amaranthine flower on earth
Is virtue.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. iii, l. 268.

And virtue, tho' in rags, will keep me warm.
DRYDEN, Imitations of Horace. Bk. iii, 29, 87.

He is ill clothed who is bare of virtue

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1733.

Rags are royal raiment when worn for virtue's sake

BARTLEY T. CAMPBELL, The White Slave. Act iii.

For virtue which alone is free, cannot be brought into subjection (Virtus enim servire non potest, que sola libera est.)

JEROME OSORNIUS, De Gloria. Bk. i, ch. 7.

Virtue, dear friend, needs no defence,
The surest guard is innocence:
None knew, till guilt created fear,
What darts or poison'd arrows were.
(Integer vitæ scelerisque purus
Non eget Mauris jaculis neque arcu
Nec venenatis gravida sagittis,
Fusce, phœtrea.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 22, st. 1. (Dillon, tr.)

Though men may falter, it is Virtue's strength
To be indelible: our smallest good
By our worst evil cannot be undone.

R. U. JOHNSON, The Voice of Webster.

With virtue and quietness one may conquer
the world.

LAO-TSE, The Simple Way, No. 45.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon

Were in the flat sea sunk.

MILTON, Comus, l. 373.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade.

SPENCER, Fairie Queene. Bk. i, canto i, st. 12.

Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report:
if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

New Testament; Philippians, iv, 8.

Divinity has three elements of superiority, incorruption, power, and virtue, and the most reverend and divinest of these is virtue; for in fundamental justice nothing participates except through the exercise of intelligent reasoning powers.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Aristides. Ch. 6, sec. 2.

Virtue, the most pleasing and valuable possession in the world. ('Αρετή, ἡς ἀρχὴν παῖδες οὐδὲν οὐδ' ἔθελον.)

PLUTARCH, Lives: Solon. Sec. 7.

In virtue are riches. (In virtute divitiæ)
CICERO, Paradoxa, vi, 2

Silver and gold are not the only coin; virtue too passes current all over the world.

EURIPIDES, Oedipus. Frag. 546

Of less worth than gold is silver, than virtue gold
(Vilius argentum est auro, virtutibus aurum.)

Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful
SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure. Act iii, sc.
1, l. 215.

Virtue is doubly pleasing in one whose form is beautiful (Graviter et pulchro veniens in corpore virtus)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. v, l. 344.

Virtue, not rolling suns, the mind matures.
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night v, l. 772.

IV—Virtue: Its Difficulty

There is no road or ready way to virtue
SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. i,
sec. 55.

How far from easy is virtue! How difficult is even a continual pretence of virtue! (Quam non est facilis virtus! Quam vero difficilis ejus diuturna simulatio.)

CICERO, Epistola ad Atticum. Bk. viii, epist. 1.

Virtue proceeds through toil. ('Α ὁ ἀρετὰ βαλεῖ δὴ μύθοις.)

EURIPIDES, Heracles, l. 625.

Between us and Virtue the gods placed sweat:
long and steep is the path that leads to her; but when a man has reached the top, then is she easy to reach.

HESIOD, Works and Days, l. 289.

The steep path of virtue. (Virtutis viam arduam.)
HORACE, Odes. Bk. iii, ode 24, l. 44.

Virtue requires a rough and stormy passage;
she will have either outward difficulties to wrestle with . . . or internal difficulties.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. II, ch. 11.

Virtue is the roughest way,
Not proved at night a bed of down.

SIR HENRY WOTTON, On the Imprisonment of the Earl of Essex.

1 Virtue is nothing if not difficult. (Sed nulla, nisi ardua, virtus.)

OWD, Art Amatoria, Bk. ii, l. 537.

2 Virtue itself 'escapes not calumnious strokes.'
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet, Act i, sc. 3, l. 38.

It is but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII, Act i, sc. 2, l. 75.

My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Caesar, Act ii, sc. 3, l. 13.

3 Virtue struggles after fame, regardless of the adverse heights. (Perque aspera dura Nititur ad laudem virtus interrita clivo.)

SILIUS ITALICUS, Punica, Pt. iv, l. 605.

4 It is easy enough to be prudent,

When nothing tempts you to stray;
When without or within no voice of sin

Is luring your soul away;
But it's only a negative virtue

Until it is tried by fire,
And the life that is worth the honor of earth,
Is the one that resists desire.

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX, Worth While.

V—Virtue: Its Rewards

5 Virtue is its own reward. (Officii fructus sit ipsum officium.)

CICERO, De Finibus, Bk. ii, sec. 73.

Virtue is its own reward. (Ipsa quidem Virtus pretium sibi.)

CLAUDIAN, Panegyricus Dictus Manlio Theo- doro Consul, l. 1.

Virtue, sir, is its own reward.

DWYSEN, The Assignment, Act iii, sc. 1. Also Tyrannic Love, i, 3; HOME, Douglas, iii, 1;
PRIOR, Imitations of Horace, iii, 2; etc.

The only reward of virtue is virtue.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Friendship.

Yet why should learning hope success at court?
Why should our patriots' virtues cause support?
Why to true merit should they have regard?
They know that virtue is its own reward.

JOHN GAY, Epistle to Paul Methuen, l. 39.

Virtue herself is her own fairest reward. (Ipsa quidem virtus sibi met pulcherrima merces.)

SILIUS ITALICUS, Punica, Bk. xii, l. 663.

Virtue is its own reward. There's a pleasure in doing good which sufficiently pays itself.

SIR JOHN VANBRUGH, The Relapse, Act v, sc. 1.

6 Honor is the reward of virtue, (Honor est premiū virtutis.)

CICERO, Philippicæ, No. iv, sec. 81.

In virtue there are many grades, and the highest glory is won by the highest virtue. (In virtute multi sunt addeus, ut in gloria maxime excel-let, qui virtute plurimum præstat.)

CICERO, Pro Cæcio Plancio, Ch. xiv, sec. 60.

Only virtue wins eternal Fame.

PETRARCE, The Triumph of Fame, Pt. i, l. 183.

7 For blessings ever wait on virtuous deeds,
And though a late, a sure reward succeeds.

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride, Act v, sc. 12.

8 Either virtue is an empty name, or the wise man rightly seeks it as his glory and reward.
(Aut virtus nomen inane est, Aut decus et pretium recte petit experiens vir.)

HORACE, Epistles, Bk. i, epist. 17, l. 41.

9 Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt,
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd,
Yea, even that which mischief meant most harm,

Shall in the happy trial prove most glory.

MILTON, Comus, l. 589.

10 Not among many thousands will you find
One man who considers virtue its own reward.
(Nec facile invenias multis in milibus unum, Virtutem pretium qui putet esse sui.)

OWD, Epistula ex Ponto, Bk. ii, epist. 3, l. 11.

When the prizes fall to the lot of the wicked, you will not find many who are virtuous for virtue's sake.

SALLUST, History, Bk. i, frag.

11 Virtue will not be followed except for her own sake. (La vertu ne veut être suivie que pour elle même.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays, Bk. ii, ch. 1.

12 In your opinion virtue requires no reward and is to be sought for itself. (Judice te mercede caret per seque petenda est.)

OWD, Epistula ex Ponto, Bk. ii, epist. 3, l. 35.

Beauty, goodness, justice, and the like, each exists in and for itself.

PLATO, (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Plato, Bk. iii, l. 13.)

O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue even for virtue's sake.

POPE, Temple of Fame, l. 364.

13 You ask what I seek from virtue? Itself. For virtue has nothing better to give; its value is in itself.

SENECA, De Vita Beata, Ch. ix, sec. 4.

14 One should seek virtue for its own sake, and not from hope or fear, or any external motive. It is in virtue that happiness consists, for virtue is the state of mind which tends to make the whole of life harmonious.

ZENO. (DIOGENES LAERTIUS, Zeno, Bk. vii, 89.)

VI—Virtue and Happiness

15 Here will I hold. If there's a Power above
(And that there is all nature cries aloud Through all her works), he must delight in virtue;

¹ Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
Is the best gift of Heaven: a happiness
That even above the smiles and frowns of fate
Exalts great Nature's favourites.

JOHN ARMSTRONG, Art of Preserving Health.
Bk. iv, l. 284.

² Neither can the virtues exist without happy life, nor happy life without the virtues (Nec enim virtutes sine beata vita coherere possunt nec illa sine virtutibus.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v,
ch. 28, sec. 80.

³ Well may your hearts believe the truths I tell:

'Tis virtue makes the bliss, where'er we dwell.

WILLIAM COLLINS, Persian Eclogues. No. i, l. 5.

Virtue alone is happiness below.

GEORGE CRABBE, The Borough. Letter xvi.

⁴ You may be more happy than princes, if you will be more virtuous.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

Be in general virtuous, and you will be happy.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, On Early Marriages.

Virtue and Happiness are Mother and Daughter.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1746.

⁵ Shall ignorance of good and ill
Dare to direct the eternal will?
Seek virtue, and, of that possess,
To Providence resign the rest.

JOHN GAY, Fables: The Father and Jupiter.

⁶ You wish to live rightly (and who does not?);
since Virtue alone can achieve this, boldly drop trifles and scorn delights.

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 6, l. 29.

Nor can you suppose that anyone is happy but the man who is wise and good. (Neve putes alium sapiente bonoque beatum.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 16, l. 20.

And if the Wise be the happy man, as these sages say, he must be virtuous too; for without virtue happiness cannot be.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xiv, p. 405.

⁷ Through virtue lies the one and only road to a life of peace. (Tranquilla per virtutem patet unica via.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. x, l. 364.

⁸ Mortals that would follow me,
Love virtue; she alone is free;
She can teach ye how to climb
Higher than the spherie chime;
Or if virtue feeble were,
Heav'n itself would stoop to her.

MILTON, Comus, l. 1018.

Virtue may choose the men of her own way,
'T is just alike to Virtue and to me;
Dwell in a monk, or light upon a king.
She's still the same below'd, contented thing.

POPE, Epilogue to the Satires. Dial. i, l. 137.

What nothing earthly gives or can destroy,
The soul's calm sunshine and the heartfelt joy,
Is Virtue's prize.

POPE, Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 167.

Know then this truth (enough for man to know),
"Virtue alone is happiness below."

POPE, Essay on Man. Epis. iv, l. 309.

¹¹ Be virtuous & you'll be happy!

ARTEMUS WARD, Fourth of July Oration.

Be virtuous and you will be eccentric.

MARK TWAIN, Mental Photographs.

Be good and you will be lonesome.

VII—Virtue and Immortality

¹² Virtue never grows old.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

¹³ Virtue treads paths that end not in the grave;
No ban of endless night exiles the brave.

J. R. LOWELL, Commemoration Ode.

¹⁴ He who dies for virtue does not perish. (Qui per virtutem perit, ad non interit.)

PLAUTUS, Captivi, l. 690. (Act iii, sc. 5.)

For virtue will endure to posterity; envy will not reach them. (Ad posteros enim virtus durabit non perveniet invidia.)

QUINTILLIAN, De Institutione Oratoria, Bk. iii,
ch. 1.

¹⁵ The renown which riches or beauty confer is fleeting and frail; virtue remains bright and eternal. (Divitiarum et formæ gloria fluxa atque fragile est; virtus clara æternaque habetur.)

SALLUST, Catalina Ch. i, sec. 4.

¹⁶ Virtue lives beyond the grave. (Vivit post funera virtus.)

TIBERIUS CESAR, (BORBOGNIUS, Lives: Tiberius.)

Virtue shall live even after the funeral.

page*, 1578. Inscribed on monument of Thomas Lindsay, Old Saint Paul's Church,
London, 1557.

¹⁷ Glory's voice is impotent to pierce
The silence of the tomb; but virtue blooms
Even on the wreck of life, and mounts the skies.

THOMAS PAINE, Common Sense. Ch. 4.

If there be no nobility of descent, all the more indispensable is it that there should be nobility of ascent—a character in them that bear rule, so fine and high and pure, that as men come within the circle of its influence they involuntarily pay homage to that which is the one preëminent distinction, the Royalty of Virtue.

HENRY CORMAN POTTER, Address, 30 April, 1889.

1 O Virtue! I have followed thee through life, and I find thee at last but a shade.

EURIPIDES, Emerson, Essays, First Series: Heracles.

2 The virtue which requires to be ever guarded is scarcely worth the sentinel.

GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 5.

3 Virtue seldom walks forth without Vanity at her side.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 866.

Virtue would not go so far if vanity did not keep it company. (La vertu n'irait pas si loin si la vanité ne lui tenait compagnie.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 200.

4 Some of 'em [virtues] like extinct volcanoes, with a strong memory of fire and brimstone.

DOUGLAS FERROLD, The Catspaw. Act iii, sc. 1.

5 Virtues lose themselves in self-interest, as streams lose themselves in the sea. (Les vertus se perdent dans l'intérêt, comme les fleuves se perdent dans la mer.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 171.

6 Be virtuous: not too much; just what's correct:

Excess in anything is a defect.

(Faut d'être vertueux, pas trop n'en faut, L'excès en tout est un défaut.)

J. M. B. MONVIEL, Erreur d'un moment.

7 I am not impressed by external devices for the preservation of virtue in men or women.
Marriage laws, the police, armies and navies are the mark of human incompetence.

DORA RUSSELL, The Right to Be Happy, p. 241.

8 Virtue withers away if it has no opposition.
(Marcet sine adversario virtus.)

SENECA, De Providentia. Sec. 2.

9 He was a fool, For he would needs be virtuous.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 133.

Virtue finds no friends.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 126.

Virtue! a fig! 'tis in ourselves that we are thus or thus.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 3, l. 322.

10 Virtue often trips and falls on the sharp-edged rock of poverty.

ERDMAN SUE, The Mysteries of Paris. Ch. 1.

11 Come down and redeem us from virtue,
Our Lady of Pain.

SWINBURNE, Dolores.

12 Virtue: No Martyr

Many wish not so much to be virtuous, as to seem to be. (Virtute enim ipsa non tam multi præditi esse quam videri volunt.)

CICERO, De Amicitia. Ch. xxi, sec. 96.

And he by no uncommon lot
Was fam'd for virtues he had not.

COWPER, To the Rev. William Hall, l. 19.

13 There are no two things so much talked of,
and so seldom seen, as virtue and the funds.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. 1, No. 312.

Let those who would affect singularity with success, first determine to be very virtuous, and they will be sure to be very singular.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. 1, No. 461.

14 Virtue engages his assent,
But Pleasure wins his heart.

WILLIAM COWPER, Human Frailty, l. 12.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. 1, l. 482.

15 Virtues are, in the popular estimate, rather the exception than the rule. There is the man and his virtues.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Self-Reliance.

16 If it is usual to be deeply moved by rare things, why are we so little moved by virtue?
(S'il est ordinaire d'être vivement touché des choses rares, pourquoi le sommes-nous si peu de la vertu?)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Pt. 1, No. 25.

Virtue was always in a minority on the earth.
(La vertu fut toujours en minorité sur la terre.)

ROBESPIÈRE.

VISION

See also Ghost

17 Sometimes he thinks that Heaven the vision sent,

And ordered all the pageants as they went;
Sometimes, that only 'twas wild Fancy's play,
The loose and scattered relics of the day.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Davidides. Bk. ii, l. 769.

18 Golden hours of vision come to us in this present life, when we are at our best, and our faculties work together in harmony.

CHARLES FLECHER, D.D., The Hope of Immortality.

Forward, on the same old journey, let us follow
where she leads,

Let us chase the beckoning glory of the Vision that Recedes.

SAM WALTER FOSSE, The Vision that Recedes.

19 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight!
THOMAS GRAY, The Bard, l. 161.

20 Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that the may run that readeth it.
Old Testament: Habakkuk; ii, 2.

1
Do I sleep? do I dream?
Do I wonder and doubt?
Are things what they seem?
Or is visions about?

BRET HARTE, Further Language from Truthful James, l. 1.

Is this a vision? is this a dream? do I sleep?
SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, III, 5, 142.

2
I have multiplied visions, and used similitudes.
Old Testament: Hosea, xii, 10.

3
And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions.

Old Testament: Joel, ii, 28; Acts, ii, 17.

The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme,
The young men's vision, and the old men's dream
DRYDEN, Absalom and Achitophel. Pt. 1, l. 238.

Thy wife hath dream'd, thy mother hath seen visions.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 3, 63.

4
Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
Fled is that music:—do I wake or sleep?
KEATS, Ode to a Nightingale. St. 8.

True to a vision, steadfast to a dream.
STEPHEN PHILLIPS, Ulysses. Act i, sc. 1.

5
Ah splendid Vision, golden time,
An end of hunger, cold, and crime,
An end of rent, an end of rank,
An end of balance at the bank!

ANDREW LANG, The New Millennium.

6
It is a dream, sweet child! a waking dream,
A blissful certainty, a vision bright,
Of that rare happiness, which even on earth
Heaven gives to those it loves.

LONGFELLOW, Spanish Student. Act iii, sc. 5.

7
I took it for a fairy vision
Of some gay creatures of the element
That in the colours of the rainbow live
And play i' th' plighted clouds.
MILTON, Comus, l. 298.

8
My thoughts by night are often filled
With visions false as fair:
For in the past alone I build
My castles in the air.

THOMAS LOVE PEACOCK, Castles in the Air.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's romantic wish, the chemist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal fame.

POPE, Dunciad. BK. III, l. 9.

See also under CARTEL.

Where there is no vision, the people perish.
Old Testament: Proverbs, xxix, 18.

10
'T was but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
Which the brain makes of fumes: our very eyes

Are sometimes like our judgements, blind.
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 300.

Alas! How is 't with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
And with the incorporal air do bold discourse?
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 116.

11
Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.

I have thee not, and yet I see thee stiff.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind, a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 33.

The air-drawn dagger.
SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 62.

12
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,

The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 148.
(1611)

The cloud cap'd Towers
The Gorgeous Palaces,
The Solemn Temples,
The Great Globe itself,
Yea all which it inherit,
Shall dissolve

And like the baseless Fabric of a Vision
Leave not a wreck behind.

Inscription, on tablet in the left hand of the statue of Shakespeare in Westminster Abbey.

Those golden palaces, those gorgeous halls,
With furniture superfluously fair;
Those stately courts, those sky-encom'ring walls
Evanish all—like vapours in the air.
SIR WILLIAM ALEXANDER, Illusion. (1615)

13
What stately vision mocks my waking sense?
Hence, dear delusion, sweet enchantment,
hence!

HORACE AND JAMES SMITH, An Address With- out a Phoenix, l. 1.

Ah me! the vision has vanished,
The music has died away.
WILLIAM WESTMORE STOKES, Chloëpore.

14
Vision is the art of seeing things invisible.
SWIFT, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

15
Perfect blessedness, which consists in a vision of God. (Beatitudinem perfectam, quæ in Dei visione consistit.)

St. THOMAS AQUINAS, Summa Theologiae.
Hence "beatific vision."

But Shapes, that come not at an earthly call,
Will not depart when mortal voices bid;
Lords of the visionary eye whose lid,
Once raised, remains aghast, and will not fall!
WORDSWORTH, Dian. St. 5.

To whom, in vision clear,
The aspiring heads of future things appear,
Like mountain-tops whose mists have rolled away.

WORDSWORTH, Poems Dedicated to National Independence. Pt. ii, No. 43.

The thrilling, solemn voice, so passionless.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. ix, l. 248.

Quiet, priestlike voice,
Too used to syllable damnations round
To make a natural emphasis worth while.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. iv, l. 635.

I am sad-voiced as the turtle
Which Anacreon used to feed.
E. B. BROWNING, Wine of Cyprus. St. 6.

His voice in one dull, deep, unvaried sound,
Seems to break forth from caverns underground.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Rosciad, l. 567.

His voice no touch of harmony admits,
Irregularly deep, and shrill by fits.
The two extremes appear like man and wife,
Coupled together for the sake of strife.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Rosciad, l. 1003.

Let me hear
Thy voice—my own affrights me with its echoes.

CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act ii, sc. 1.

His voice is soft as is the upper air,
Or dying lovers' words.

DRYDEN, The Rival Ladies. Act i, sc. 3.

At some glad moment was it nature's choice
To dower a scarp of sunset with a voice?

EDGAR FAWCETT, To an Oriole.

I love to hear thine earnest voice,
Wherever thou art hid.

1 He ceas'd; but left so pleasing on the ear
His voice, that list'ning still they seemed to hear.

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xiii, l. 1. (Pope, tr.)

The voice so sweet, the words so fair,
As some soft chime had stroked the air;
And though the sound were parted thence,
Still left an echo in the sense.

BEN JONSON, Eupheme. Pt. iv, st. 10.

2 The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice, that he a while Thought him still speaking, still stood fix'd to hear.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. viii, l. 1.

He ceased; but still their trembling ears retained
The deep vibrations of his witching song.

A voice so thrilling ne'er was heard
In spring-time from the Cuckoo-bird,
Breaking the silence of the seas
Among the farthest Hebrides.

WORDSWORTH, The Solitary Reaper, l. 13.

12 Two voices are there; one is of the sea,
One of the mountains; each a mighty Voice,
In both from age to age thou didst rejoice,
They were thy chosen music, Liberty!

WORDSWORTH, Poems Dedicated to National Independence. Pt. I, No. 12.

III—Voice in Women

13 Her voice changed like a bird's:
There grew more of the music and less of the words.

ROBERT BROWNING, The Flight of the Duchess.
St. 15.

And her voice was the warble of a bird,
So soft, so sweet, so delicately clear,
That finer, simpler music ne'er was heard;
The sort of sound we echo with a tear,
Without knowing why—an overpowering tone,
Whence melody descends, as from a throne.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 151.

14 The devil hath not, in all his quiver's choice,
An arrow for the heart like a sweet voice.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xv, st. 13.

For it stirs the blood in an old man's heart,
And makes his pulses fly,
To catch the thrill of a happy voice,
And the light of a pleasant eye.
N. P. WILLS, Saturday Afternoon.

15 Then read from the treasured volume
The poem of thy choice,
And lend to the rhyme of the poet
The beauty of thy voice.

LONGFELLOW, The Day Is Done. St. 10.

Oh, there is something in that voice that reaches
The innermost recesses of my spirit!
LONGFELLOW, The Divine Tragedy: The First
Passover. Pt. vi

Thy voice is a celestial melody.
LONGFELLOW, Musque of Pandora. Pt. v, l. 2.

Her silver voice
Is the rich music of a summer bird,
Heard in the still night, with its passionate excesses.

LONGFELLOW, The Spirit of Poetry, l. 55

How sweetly sounds the voice of a good woman!

It is so seldom heard, that, when it speaks,
It ravishes all senses.

MIDDLETON, The Old Law. Act iv, sc. 2.

Her voice, whate'er she said, enchanted;
Like music to the heart it went.

SAMUEL ROGERS, Jacqueline. Pt. i, l. 80.

Her voice was like the voice the stars
Had when they sang together.

D. G. ROSSINI, The Blessed Damsel. St. 10

Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman
SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act v, sc. 3, l. 272.

Silence, beautiful voice!
Be still, for you only trouble the mind
With a joy in which I cannot rejoice,
A glory I shall not find.

TENNYSON, Maud, l. 180.

VOLTAIRE

Voltaire and Shakespeare! He was all
The other feigned to be.

The flippant Frenchman speaks: I weep;
And Shakespeare weeps with me.

MATTHIAS CLAUDIUS, A Comparison

Built God a church, and laugh'd his word to scorn,

Skilful alike to seem devout and just,
And stab religion with a sly side-thrust.

COWPER, Retirement, l. 668

Just known, and knows no more, her Bible true—
A truth the brilliant Frenchman never knew
COWPER, Truth, l. 328

He is like the false Amphitryon; although a stranger, it is always he who has the air of being master of the house.

BRUCE, (Emerson, Quotation and Originality)

Voltaire was an apostle of Christian ideas;
only the names were hostile to him, and he never knew it otherwise. He was like the son of the slave-driver in the Gospel, who said No, and went; the other said Yes, and went not.

VOTE AND VOTING

I consider biennial elections as a security that the sober, second thought of the people shall be law

FISHER AMES, Speech, Jan., 1788

It is hard in all causes, but especially in religion, when voices shall be numbered and not weighed.

FRANCIS BACON, Of Church Controversies

Universal suffrage is the government of a house by its nursery.

BISMARCK, Saying

The notion that a man's liberty consists in giving his vote at election-bustings, and saying, "Behold, now, I too have my twentythousandth part of a Talker in our National Palaver."

A straw vote only shows which way the hot air blows.

O. HARTY, (New American Literature, p. 170.)

The freeman casting, with unpurchased hand,
The vote that shakes the turrets of the land.

O. W. HOLMES, Poetry, a Metrical Essay, l. 85.

A weapon that comes down as still

As sparks fall upon the sod;

But creates a freeman's will,

As lightning does the will of God;

And from its force, nor doors nor locks

Can shield you; 'tis the ballot-box.

JOHN FRANKLIN, A Word from a Politician.

I am not one to hunt for the votes of a sickle public, at the cost of suspicion and gifts of worn-out clothes. (Non ego ventosae plebis suffragia vehor Impensis, penarum et tritae munere vestis.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. I, epist. 19, l. 37.

The right of election is the very essence of the constitution.

JUNIUS, Letters. No. 11, 24 Apr., 1769.

Among free men there can be no successful appeal from the ballot to the bullet.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (E. J. YOUNG, The Lesson of the Hour: Magazine of History. No. 43.)

I go for all sharing the privileges of the government who assist in bearing its burdens. Consequently I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms, by no means excluding females.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Letter, 1836.

Is virtue verily found in voices?

Or is wisdom won when all win votes?

SWINBURNE, A Word from the Psalmist. St. 3.

Is a vote a coat? will franchise feed you,

Or words be a roof against the rain?

SWINBURNE, A Word from the Psalmist. St. 4.

All forward-looking minds know that, sooner or later, the chief public question in this country will be woman's claim to the ballot.

THEODORE TILTON. (Independent, 18 Jan., 1866.)

As long as I count the votes, what are you going to do about it?

WILLIAM MARCY TWEEDE, of the ballot in New York City, in November, 1871.

More men have been elected between Sundown and Sunup, than ever were elected between Sunup and Sundown.

WILL ROGERS, The Illiterate Digest, p. 152.

The votes of veering crowds are not

The things that are more excellent.

WILLIAM WATSON, Things That Are More Excellent.

Democracy's ceremonial, its feast, its great function, is the election.

H. G. WELLS, Democracy.

Your telegram received. I would feel deeply mortified to have you or anyone like you vote for me. Since you have access to many disloyal citizens and I have not, I will ask you to convey this message to them.

3 Vulgarity is setting store by "the things that are seen."

STUDNEY, LADY MORGAN, Diary, 12 Sept., 1818. Vulgarity is only in concealment of truth, or affectation.

JOHN RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Bk. II, pt. II, ch. 6, sec. 7.

The higher a man stands, the more the word "vulgar" becomes unintelligible to him.

JOHN RUSKIN, Modern Painters. Bk. III, pt. IV, ch. 7, sec. 9.

4 So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould.

EDMUND WALLER, To Mr. Killigrew.

5 Vulgarity is simply the conduct of other people.

OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband. Act III.

6 One should absorb the colour of life, but one should never remember its details. Details are always vulgar.

WAITING

7 Serene I fold my hands and wait.

JOHN BURROUGHS, Waiting.

For evermore I wait, and longer too.

ROBERT HENRYSON, The Town and Country Mouse.

But the waiting time, my brothers,
Is the hardest time of all.

SAMAH DOUDNEY, The Hardest Time of All.

8 Who longest waits of all most surely wins.

HELEN HUNT JACKSON, The Victory of Patience.

9 Learn to labor and to wait.

LONGFELLOW, A Psalm of Life.

10 She knew the life-long martyrdom,

The weariness, the endless pain

Of waiting for some one to come

Who nevermore would come again.

LONGFELLOW, Vittoria Colonna. St. 6.

11 They also serve who only stand and wait.

MILTON, Sonnet: On His Blindness.

12 Stidkeley: There is only one thing to be done.

Woodhouse: What's that?

Stidkeley: To wait and see.

Woodhouse: Wait and see!

Stidkeley: Wait and see what happens.

A. W. PINERO, Preserving Mr. Pannure. Act III.

13 Everything comes to those who can wait.

(Tout vient à point qui peut attendre.)

MARSHALL, Works. Bk. IV, ch. 48. (1548)

Everything comes if a man will only wait.

BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Tamara. Bk. IV, ch. 8.

All things come round to him who will but wait.

LONGFELLOW, Tales of a Wayside Inn: The Student's Tale. Last line, quoted.

Everything comes to him who hustles while he waits.

THOMAS A. EDISON. (Golden Book, Apr., 1931.)

Alas! all things come too late for those who wait.

JAMES HUNTER, Chopin, p. 77.

Ah, "all things come to those who wait,"

(I say these words to make me glad),

But something answers, soft and sad,

"They come, but often come too late."

MARY MONTGOMERIE SINGLETON, Tout Vient à Qui Sait Attendre.

14 Patient waiters are no losers.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 824.

15 Although I enter not,

Yet round about the spot

Ofttimes I hover;

And near the sacred gate

With longing eyes I wait,

Expectant of her.

THACKERAY, At the Church Gate.

WALKING

16 They wha canna walk right are sure to come to wrang,

Creep awa', my bairmie, creep afore ye gang.

JAMES BALLANTINE, Creep Afore Ye Gang.

17 Never walk fast in the streets, which is a mark of vulgarity . . . though it may be tolerable in a tradesman.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters.

18 I nauseate walking; 'tis a country diversion;

I loathe the country.

CONGREVE, The Way of the World. Act IV, sc. 2

19 Why then do you walk around as though you had swallowed a spit? (Τί οὐκ ἔπεισας καταπίων σπυρίον.)

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. I, ch. 21, sec. 2.

Old Testament: Isaiah, iii, 16.

³ Walking is the best possible exercise. Habituate yourself to walk very far. The Europeans value themselves on having subdued the horse to the uses of man; but I doubt whether we have not lost more than we have gained, by the use of this animal.
THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. v, p. 54.

⁴ And so to tread
As if the wind, not she, did walk;
Nor prest a flower, nor bow'd a stalk.
BEN JONSON, Masques: The Vision of Delight.

ALINE KILMER, Experience.

I love that beauty should go beautifully.
TENNYSON, Gervant and Emid, l. 679.

⁵ I'll fetch a turn about the garden.
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act i, sc. 1, l. 81.
Come, you and I must walk a turn together.
SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act v, sc. 1, l. 93.

⁶ I grant I never saw a goddess go;
My mistress, when she walks, treads on the ground.
SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. cxxx.

(So pricketh them nature in their corages;) Then longen folk to go on pilgrimages.
CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 9.

¹³ We travel not for trafficking alone;
By hotter winds our fiery hearts are fanned.
For lust of knowing what should not be known,
We take the Golden Road to Samarkand.

JAMES ELROY FLECKER, Hassam. Act v, sc. 2.
We are the Pilgrims, master; we shall go
Always a little further; it may be
Beyond that last blue mountain barred with snow,
Across that angry or that glimmering sea.
JAMES ELROY FLECKER, Hassam. Act v, sc. 2.

¹⁴ Beyond the East the sunrise, beyond the West the sea,
And East and West the wander-thirst that will not let me be.
GERALD GOULD, Wander-Thirst.

¹⁵ Where forlorn sunsets flare and fade
On desolate sea and lonely sand,
Out of the silence and the shade
What is the voice of strange command
Calling you still, as friend calls friend
With love that cannot brook delay,
To rise and follow the ways that wind
Over the hills and far away? . . .
From faded hopes and hopes agleam,
It calls you, calls you night and day
Beyond the dark into the dream
Over the hills and far away.

RODYARD KIPLING, The Explorer. St. 2.

¹⁶ I am fevered with the sunset,

I am fretful with the bay,
For the wander-thirst is on me
And my soul is in Cathay.

RICHARD HOVEY, The Sea Gypsy.

There's a schooner in the offing,
With her topsails shot with fire,
And my heart has gone aboard her
For the Islands of Desire

I must forth again to-morrow!
With the sunset I must be fathomless sea, and not a dogpound.

ELBERT HUBBARD, Epigrams.

2 Upon the road to Romany
It's stay, friend, stay!
There's lots o' love and lots o' time
To linger on the way;
Poppies for the twilight,
Roses for the noon,
It's happy goes as lucky goes,
To Romany in June
WALLACE IRWIN, From Romany to Rome.

3 The white moth to the closing bine,

Sheer to the Austral Light,
Where the besom of God is the wild South wind,
Sweeping the sea-floors white.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Gipsy Trail. St. 8.

In the days when we were gyping,
A long time ago.
EDWIN RAINFORD, Gyping.

What care I for my house and my land?
What care I for my money, O?
What care I for my new-wedded lord?
I'm off with the wrangle-tangle gipsies, O.
UNKNOWN, The Wrangle-Tangle Gipsies.

4 The wild hawk to the wind-swept sky,
The deer to the wholesome wild,
And the heart of a man to the heart of a maid,
As it was in the days of old.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Gipsy Trail. St. 11.

The hawk to the open sky,
The red deer to the wood;
The Romany lass for the Romany lad,
As in the days of old.
FREDERIC BOWEN-WHEATLAND, (Quoted in N. Y.
Times Book Review as anticipating Kipling.)

5 You have heard the beat of the off-shore
wind,
And the thresh of the deep-sea rain;
You have heard the song—how long? how long?

Pull out on the trail again!

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Long Trail. St. 1.

Her plates are flaked by the sun, dear lass,
And her ropes are taut with the dew,
For we're beaming down on the old trail, our own trail, the out trail,
We're sagging south on the Long Trail—the trail that is always new.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Long Trail. St. 7.

The Lord knows what we may find, dear lass,
And The Deuce knows what we may do—
But we're back once more on the old trail, our
own trail, the out trail,
We're down, hull-down, on the Long Trail—the trail that is always new!

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Long Trail. St. 10.

6 I'm the ramblin' son with the nervous feet
That never was made for a steady beat.
I had many a job—for a little while;
I've been on the bum, and I've lived in style,
But there was the road windin' mile after mile,
And nothing to do but go.

H. H. KNIBBS, Nothing To Do But Go.

7 The loose foot of the wanderer
Is curst as well as blest!
It urges ever, ever on
And never gives him rest. . . .
No maid will ever hold him long
Tho' she be trim and fair—
He urges ever, ever on

With star-dust in his hair.

HESPER LE GALLIENNE, The Wanderer.

8 I must go down to the seas again, to the lonely sea and the sky,
And all I ask is a tall ship and a star to steer her by,
And the wheel's kick and the wind's song and the white sail's shaking,
And a grey mist on the sea's face and a grey dawn breaking.

JOHN MASSEFIELD, Sea-Fever. St. 1.

I must go down to the seas again to the vagrant
gypsy life,
To the gull's way and the whale's way where the wind's like a whetted knife;
And all I ask is a merry yarn from a laughing fellow-rover,
And quiet sleep and a sweet dream when the long trick's over.

JOHN MASSEFIELD, Sea-Fever. St. 3.

I must go; the sea has called me
As a restless to her seas;
From the immemorial tumult

I shall drink of peace again.

F. O'NEILL GALLAGHER, See Madness.

1 Friends and loves we have none, nor wealth
nor blest abode,

But the hope of the City of God at the other end of the road.

Not for us are content, and quiet, and peace of mind,

For we go seeking a city that we shall never find.

JOHN MAREFIELD, The Seekers, St. 1.

It's the white road westwards is the road I must tread

To the green grass, the cool grass, and rest for heart and head,

To the violets and the brown brooks and the thrushes' song

In the fine land, the west land, the land where I belong.

JOHN MAREFIELD, The West Wind.

2 It's little I know what's in my heart,
What's in my mind it's little I know,
But there's that in me must up and start,
And it's little I care where my feet go.

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY, Departure.

3 Better sit still where born, I say,
Wed one sweet woman and love her well,
Love and be loved in the old East way.

Drink sweet waters, and dream in a spell,
Than to wander in search of the Blessed Isles,
And to sail the thousands of watery miles
In search of love, and find you at last
On the edge of the world, and a cure'd outcast.

R. L. STEVENSON, The Vagabond.

I cannot rest from travel; I will drink
Life to the lees.

ALFRED TENNYSON, Ulysses, l. 6.

Afoot and light-hearted I take to the open road,
Healthy, free, the world before me,
The long brown path before me leading wherever
I choose.

Henceforth I ask not good-fortune, I myself am good-fortune,

Henceforth I whisper no more, postpone no
more, need nothing,
Done with indoor complaints, libraries, querulous
criticisms,

Strong and content I travel the open road.

WALT WHITMAN, Song of the Open Road.

6 I looked in his eyes and I read the news;

His heart was having the railroad blues.

Oh, the railroad blues will cost you dear,

I—War: Definitions

A meditation on the conduct of political societies made old Hobbes imagine that war was the state of nature.

EDMUND BURKE, Vindication of Natural Society.

Hobbes clearly proves that every creature lives in a state of war by nature.

SWIFT, Poetry: A Rhapsody.

War is pusillanimously carried out in this degenerate age; quarter is given; towns are taken and the people spared: even in a storm, a woman can hardly hope for the benefit of a rape.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 12 JAN., 1757.

O great corrector of enormous times,
Shaker of o'er-rank states, thou grand decider

Of dusty and old titles, that heal'st with blood
The earth when it is sick, and cure'st the world

O' the pleurisy of people.

Our wearisome pedantic art of war,
By which we prove retreat may be success,
Dilly beat good, half loss, at times, whole gain.

SWIFT, Knockout, Darius. Act 2.

War is the trade of kings.
DENO, King Arthur. Act I, sc. 2.

Military glory—that attractive rainbow, that rises in showers of blood, that serpent's eye that charms to destroy.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Speech Against the War with Mexico, House of Representatives, 12 Jan., 1848.

From rank showers of blood,
And the red light of blazing roofs, you build
The Rainbow Glory, and to shuddering Conscience Cry,—Lo, the Bridge to Heaven!

BULWER-LYTTON, Richelieu. Act 1, sc. 2.

When he drew the sword, he threw away the scabbard. . . . He knew that the essence of war is violence, and that moderation in war is imbecility.

MACAULAY, Essays: Lord Nugent's Memorials of Hampden. Referring to John Hampden.

War should be the only study of a prince. He should consider peace only as a breathing-time, which gives him leisure to contrive, and furnishes ability to execute, military plans.

MACHIAVELLI, The Prince.

And by a prince, he means every sort of state, however constituted.

BURKE, Vindication of Natural Society.

Two armies are two bodies which meet and try to frighten each other.

Yield, ye arms, to the toga. (Cedant arma togæ.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 22, sec. 77.

It is always easy to begin a war, but very difficult to stop one, since its beginning and end are not under the control of the same man. Anyone, even a coward, can commence a war, but it can be brought to an end only with the consent of the victors.

SALLUST, Jugurtha. Sec. 83.

Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars . . .

And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.

SHAKESPEARE, King John. Act v, sc. 2, l. 83.

Military service produces moral imbecility, ferocity and cowardice, and the defence of nations must be undertaken by the civil enterprise of men enjoying all the rights and liberties of citizenship

BERNARD SHAW, John Bull's Other Island: Preface.

There is only one virtue, pugnacity; only one vice, pacifism. That is an essential condition of war.

SHAW, Heartbreak House: Introductory.

War is the statesman's game, the priest's delight,

The lawyer's jest, the hired assassin's trade.

The whiff of grapeshot can, if needful, become a blast and tempest.

CARLYLE, French Revolution. Pt. 4, bk. 5, ch. 3.

Singular: in old Broglie's time, six years ago, this Whiff of Grapeshot was promised; but it could not be given then. . . . Now, however, the time is come for it, and the man [Napoleon]; and behold, you have it.

CARLYLE, French Revolution. Pt. 4, bk. 7, ch. 7.

MARCUS CATO, his hatred and fear of Carthage was such that he concluded every speech, every letter and every conversation with the words, Ceterum censeo, Carthaginiensem esse delendam, "In my opinion, Carthage must be destroyed." (δοκεί μοι καὶ Καρχηδόνα πρὸν εἶναι.) (PLUTARCH, Lives: Marcus Cato, Ch. 27, sec. 1.) Publius Scipio Nasica always countered with, "In my opinion, Carthage must be spared."

⁵ The battle is lost, but there is time to gain another.

MARSHAL LOUIS CHARLES DESAIX, to Napoleon, who thought at four o'clock in the afternoon, that the battle of Marengo was lost. Desaix's division saved the day, though, in the advance, he was shot through the heart. Napoleon had him buried at the summit of the St. Bernard Pass, saying, "His tomb shall have the Alps for its pedestal." (O'MEARA, Napoleon in Exile.)

My right has been rolled up; my left has been driven back; my centre has been smashed. I have ordered an advance from all directions.

¹¹ Gentlemen of the French Guard, fire first!

LORD CHARLES HAY, lieutenant of the First Grenadier Guards, at the battle of Fontenoy, 30 April, 1745. Comte d'Auteroches, commanding the French Guards, is said to have replied, "Sir, the French Guards never fire first; please to fire yourselves" (FOURNIER, L'Esprit dans L'Histoire.) MARSHAL MACMAHON, after he had taken the Malakof fortress by assault, during the siege of Sebastopol, 8 Sept., 1855, and been warned that the fort might be blown up. A letter from General Biddulph to Germain Bapst states that MacMahon uttered the phrase to him. (L'Eclair, May, 1908.) Gabrieli Hanotaux (Contemporary France) states that MacMahon denied this. The Marquis de Castellane (Revue Hebdomadaire, May, 1908) asserts that he himself coined the phrase during a speech in the National Assembly and attributed it to MacMahon. (See also Notes and Queries, 15 July, 1911.) Used by Victor Emmanuel at the occupation of Rome by the Italian army, Sept., 1870.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act i, sc. 1, l. 9.

If God gave the hand, let not Man withhold the sword. All have the right to fight: none have the right to judge. To Man the weapon: to Heaven the victory. Peace shall not prevail save with a sword in her hand. Nothing is ever done in this world until men are prepared to kill each other if it is not done.

BERNARD SHAW, Major Barbara. Act iii. The Undershaft mottoes for their munitions plant.

There is many a boy here today who looks on war as all glory, but, boys, it is all hell. You can hear this warning voice to generations yet to come. I look upon war with horror.

WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, Address, before a G. A. R. convention at Columbus, Ohio, 11 Aug., 1880. It was no doubt from this extempore speech that somebody coined the epigram, "War is hell," which Sherman could never remember having uttered. (See Lewis, Sherman, Fighting Prophet.) Various persons have asserted that they heard the phrase spoken by Sherman at other places, but no real evidence that it was ever discovered.

War is hell when you're getting hoked!

Illustration—General Henry J. O'Reilly (Owl-Look, 28 Oct., 1931) asserts that this is what Sherman really said, and is confirmed by Col. J. R. M. Taylor, but without convincing evidence.

You cannot qualify war in harsher terms than I will. War is cruelty, and you cannot refine it.

WILLIAM TUCKERMAN SHERMAN, Memours, II, 126.

This is the soldier brave enough to tell
The glory-dazzled world that War is hell;
Lover of peace, he looks beyond the strife,
And rides through hell to save his country's life.

HENRY VAN DYKE, Saint-Gondens' Equestrian Statues of General Sherman. This quatrain was not used by the sculptor because Sherman's coining of the phrase was thought not to be sufficiently authenticated.

IV—War: Its Horrors

3 Hence bloody wars at first began,
The artificial plague of man,
That from his own invention rise,
To scourge his own iniquities.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Satire Upon the Weakness and Misery of Man, l. 105.

4 War in fact is becoming contemptible, and ought to be put down by the great nations of Europe, just as we put down a vulgar mob.

MORTIMER COLLINS, Thoughts in My Garden.

5 War lays a burden on the reeling state.
COWPER, Exposition, l. 306.

6 Hence jarring sectaries may learn
Their real interest to discern;
That brother should not war with brother,
And worry and devour each other.

8 War, he sung, is toil and trouble.
DRYDEN, Alexander's Feast, l. 99.

9 War gratifies, or used to gratify, the combative instinct of mankind, but it gratifies also the love of plunder, destruction, cruel discipline, and arbitrary power.

C. W. ELIOT, Five American Contributions to Civilization.

10 War, to save men at the present day, begins to look like an epidemic humanity, breaking out here and there like the cholera or influenza, infecting men's brains instead of their bowels.

EMERSON, Miscellaneous: War.

11 I shed a hundred thousand sorrows touching my heart, and there is ringing in my ears like an admonition eternal, an insistent call, "It must not be again!"

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 27.

14 Curs'd is the man and void of law and right.
Unworthy property, unworthy light,
Unfit for public rule, or private care;
That wretch, that monster, that delights in war.

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. ix, l. 87. (Pope, tr.)

To gratify stern ambition's whims,
What hundreds and thousands of precious limbs
On a field of battle we scatter.

THOMAS HOOD, Miss Kilmansegg: Her Fame

15 Wars hateful to mothers. (Bellaque matribus Detestata)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. i, ode 1, l. 23

Mother whose heart hung humble as a button
On the bright splendid shroud of your son,
Do not weep.
War is kind.

STEPHEN CRANE, War Is Kind.

16 Among the calamities of war may be justly numbered the diminution of the love of truth by the falsehoods which interest dictates and credulity encourages. A peace will equally leave the warrior and the relater of wars destitute of employment; and I know not whether more is to be dreaded from streets filled with soldiers accustomed to plunder, or from garrets filled with scribblers accustomed to lie.

Why! taxes, widows, wooden legs, and debt.

FRANCIS MOORE, Almanac: Monthly Observations for 1829, p. 23.

Ye that follow the vision

Of the world's weal afar,

Have ye met with derision

And the red laugh of war?

ALFRED NOYES, Love Will Find Out the Way.

I hate that drum's discordant sound

Parading round and round and round:

To me it talks of ravaged plains,

And burning towns, and ruined swains,

And mangled limbs, and dying groans,

And widows' tears, and orphans' moans;

And all that misery's hand bestows

To fill the catalogue of human woes.

JOHN SCOTT, Ode on Hearing the Drum.

4 Dying is more honorable than killing. (Quanto honestius mori discunt homines quam occidere.)

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. lxx, 27.

We check manslaughter and isolated murders;

but what of war and the much-vaunted crime of slaughtering whole peoples? . . . Deeds which would be punished by loss of life when committed in secret, are praised by us because uni-formers generally have carried them out.

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucillum. Epis. xciv, 30.

One to destroy, is murder by the law,

And gibbets keep the lifted hand in awe;

To murder thousands takes a specious name,

War's glorious art, and gives immortal fame.

VIII.—War: The Glory of Battle

9 O proud was our army that morning,
That stood where the pine darkly towers,
When Sherman said: "Boys, you are weary;
This day fair Savannah is ours!"
Then sang we a song for our chieftain
That echoed o'er river and lea,
And the stars in our banner shone brighter
When Sherman marched down to the sea.

SAMUEL H. M. BYRNS, Song of Sherman's March to the Sea.

10 The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold.

And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold;

And the sheen of their spears was like stars on the sea,
When the blue wave rolls nightly in deep Galilee.

BYRON, The Destruction of Sennacherib.

11 The combat deepens. On, ye brave,
Who rush to glory, or the grave!
Wave, Munich! all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry!

THOMAS CAMPBELL, Hohenlinden. St. 7.

12 Conscience avault, Richard's himself again:
Hark! the shrill trumpet sounds, to horse,
away,

My soul's in arms, and eager for the fray.

CIBBER, Richard III (altered). Act v, sc. 3.

My soul is up in arms, ready to charge.
CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act iii, sc. 2.

13

In every heart

Are sown the sparks that kindle fiery war.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. v, l. 205.

A steed, a steed of matchless speed!

A sword of metal keen!

All else to noble hearts is dross,

All else on earth is man.

Death's couriers, Fame and Honour, call

Us to the field again.

ROBERT CUNNINGHAM-GRAHAM, Cavalier's Song.

14

They now to fight are gone,

Armour on armour shone,

Drum unto drum did groan,

To hear was wonder:

That with the cries they make

The very earth did shake,

Trumpet to trumpet spake,

Thunder to thunder.

MICHAEL DRAYTON, Ballet of Agincourt. St. 8.

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"

Was there a man dismay'd?

Not tho' the soldier knew

Some one had blunder'd.

Theirs not to make reply,

Theirs not to reason why,

Theirs but to do and die.

Into the valley of Death

Rode the six hundred.

TENNYSON, The Charge of the Light Brigade.

Cannon to right of them,

Cannon to left of them,

Cannon in front of them

Volley'd and thunder'd;

Storm'd at with shot and shell,

Boldly they rode and well,

Into the jaws of Death,

Into the mouth of Hell

Rode the six hundred.

THOMPSON, The Charge of the Light Brigade.

Good blows o' both sides.

JOHN FLETCHER, Bonducus. Act iii, sc. 1.

2 To arms! cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quivering lance.

THOMAS GRAY, The Bard, l. 14.

Then above all the shooting and shots Rang his voice: "Put Watts into 'em! Boys, give 'em Watts!"

BERT HART, Caldwell of Springfield.

3 Hark! I hear the tramp of thousands,
And of armed men the hum;
Lo! a nation's hosts have gathered
Round the quick alarming drum,— Saying, "Come, Freemen, come!
Ere your heritage be wasted," said the quick alarming drum.

BERT HART, Reveille. St. 1.

4 Good at the battle cry. (Bol's dyables.)

HOMER, Iliad. Bk. ii, l. 403. Frequently repeated.

5 Our business is the field of fight
Is not to question, but to prove our might.

7 Suffer me to follow the camp. (Da mihi castra sequi.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. ii, l. 348.

8 Am I deceived, or was there a clash of arms? I am not deceived, it was the clash of arms; Mars approaches, and, approaching, gave the sign of war. (Fallor, an arma sonant?
Non fallimur, arma sonabant; Mars venit, et veniens bellica signa dedat.)

QUINT. SEXT. Bk. v, l. 549.

He smelt among the trumpets, Ha, ha; and he smelt the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains, and the shouting.

Old Testament: Job, xxxi, 24.

Oh, wherefore come ye forth, in triumph from the North,

With your heads, and your neck, and your rat-ment all red?

And wherefore doth your rout send forth a joyous shout?

And whence be the grapes of the wine-press that ye tread?

MACAULAY, The Battle of Naseby. St. 1.

March to the battlefield,

The foe is now before us;

Each heart is Freedom's shield,

And heaven is shining o'er us.

B. E. O'MEARA, March to the Battlefield.

9 Stand! the ground's your own, my braves!
Will ye give it up to slaves?

JOHN PIERPONT, Warren's Address.

Lead on rain and iron hail

Let their welcome be!

JOHN PIERPONT, Warren's Address.

From the Rio Grande's waters to the icy lakes of Maine,

Let all exult, for we have met the enemy again.

Beneath their stern old mountains we have met them in their pride,

And rolled from Buena Vista back the battle's bloody tide.

GENERAL ALBERT PIKE, Battle of Buena Vista.

10 Once more unto the breach, dear friends,
once more;

Or close the wall up with our English dead.
In peace there's nothing so becomes a man

As modest stillness and humility;

But when the blast of war blows in our ears,

Then imitate the action of the tiger,

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood . . .

Now set the teeth and stretch the nostril
wide;

Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit

To his full height!

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 1.

Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen!

Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head!

Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;

ADAMS the welkin with your broken staves!

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act v, sc. 3, l. 338.

Let the only walls the foe shall scale

Be ramparts of the dead!

PAUL HAMILTON HAYNE, Vicksburg.

11 When the hurly-burly's done,

When the battle's lost and won.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act i, sc. 1, l. 3.

The tumult and the shouting dies,

The captains and the kings depart.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Recessional.

12 Who asks whether the enemy were defeated by strategy or valor? (Dolum an virtus, quis in hoste requirit?)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. ii, l. 390.

IX—War: The Terror of Battle

13 Hand to hand, and foot to foot:

Nothing there, save death, was mute;

Stroke, and thrust, and flash, and cry
For quarter, or for victory,
Mingle there with the volleying thunder.

BYRON, The Siege of Corinth, St. 24.

His trusty warriors, few but undimay'd;
Firm-paced and slow, a horrid front they form,
Still as the breeze, but dreadful as the storm;
Low murmuring sounds along their banners fly,
Revenge, or death—the watch-word and reply;
Then pealed the notes, omnipotent to charm,
And the loud tocsin tolled their last alarm!

CAMPBELL, The Pleasures of Hope, Pt. i, l. 366.

For justice guides the warrior's steel,
And vengeance strikes the blow.

J. R. DRAKE, To the Defenders of New Orleans.

Earth was the meadow, he the mower strong.
VICTOR HUGO, La Légende des Siècles.

Now deeper roll the maddening drums,
And the mingling host like ocean heaves:
While from the midst a horrid wailing comes,
And high above the fight the lonely bugle grieves.

GREENVILLE MELLEN, Ode on the Celebration of the Battle of Bunker Hill, 17 June, 1825.
Mellen's only important poem, which gave him the sobriquet of "The Singer of One Song."

Aims on armour clashing bray'd
Horrible discord, and the maddening wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd; dire was the noise
Of conflict.

MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. vi, l. 209.

To the fire-eyed maid of smoky war
All hot and bleeding will we offer them.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV, Act iv, sc. 1, l. 114.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb
of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds, . . .
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful
neighs

Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents

The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V, Act iv: Prologue, l. 4.

With clink of hammers closing rivets up.

CIBBER, Richard III (altered), Act v, sc. 3.

Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and
death.

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth, Act v, sc. 6, l. 9.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drum.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II, Act iii, sc. 3, l. 51.

Thus far into the bowels of the land

Have we march'd on without impediment.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, Act v, sc. 1, l. 3.

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with heavy fall
The usurping helmets of our adversaries!

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III, Act v, sc. 3, l. 110.

Then more fierce
The conflict grew; the din of arms, the yell
Of savage rage, the shriek of agony,
The groan of death, commingled in one sound
Of undistinguish'd horrors.

SOUTHEY, Madoc in Aslan, Pt. ii, sec. 15, l. 170.
God of battles, was ever a battle like this in the world before?

TENNYSON, The Revenge, l. 62.

They came with banner, spear, and shield;
And it was proved in Bosworth-field,
Not long the Avenger was withstood—
Earth helped him with the cry of blood.

WORDSWORTH, *Song at the Feast of Brougham
Castle*, l. 24.

X—War: Cannon

The cannon's breath
Wings the far hissing globe of death.

BYRON, The Siege of Corinth, St. 2.

Three hundred cannon threw up their emetic,
And thirty thousand muskets flung their pills.

BYRON, Don Juan, Canto viii, st. 12.

Iron-sleet of arrowy shower
Hurles in the darken'd air.

THOMAS GRAY, The Fatal Sisters.

The last argument of kings. (Ultima ratio regum.)

LOUIS XV OF FRANCE ordered this engraved on his cannon. It was ordered removed by the National assembly, 19 Aug., 1790. Its use as a motto for cannon dates back to 1613.

Prince Henry*, 21 April, 1759.

There are no manifestoes like cannon and musketry.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON, Maxims and Table-Talk.

And silence broods like spirit on the braise,
A glimmering moon begins, the moonlight runs

Over the grasses of the ancient way
Rutted this morning by the passing guns.
JOHN MARSHFIELD, August 14.

'Tis a principle of war that when you can use the lightning 'tis better than cannon.
NAPOLEON I, Sayings of Napoleon.

1 The terrible rumble, grumble and roar
Telling the battle was on once more—
And Sheridan twenty miles away!
THOMAS BUCHANAN REAS, Sheridan's Ride.

2 The cannons have their bowels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spit forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls
SHAKESPEARE, King John. Act 4, sc. 1, l. 210.

3 It was great pity, so it was,
That villainous saltpetre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry IV. Act 1, sc. 3, l. 59.
As when that devilish iron engine, wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by fury's skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ram'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill,
Conceiveth fire, the heavens it doth fill.
With thundering noise, and all the air doth choke,
That none can breathe, nor see, nor hear at will,
Through smould'ring cloud of dusky stinking smoke,

4 War must be for the sake of peace, business for the sake of leisure, things necessary and useful for the sake of things noble. (Πόλεμος μὲν εἰρημίας χάριν.)

ARISTOTLE, Politics. Bk. vii, ch. 13, sec. 8.

War should be undertaken in such a way as to show that its only object is peace. (Bellum autem ita suscipiatur, ut nihil aliud nisi pax quesita videatur.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 23, sec. 80.

The only excuse for war is that we may live in peace unharm'd. (Quare suscipienda quidem bella sunt ob eam causam, ut sine injuria in pace vivatur.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 11, sec. 35.

5 He who did well in war just earns the right
To begin doing well in peace.

ROBERT BROWNING, Luria. Act II, l. 354.

6 There's but the twinkling of a star
Between a man of peace and war.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. II, canto 3, l. 937.

7 Most people believe the achievements of war more important than those of peace, but this is a mistake. (Cum plerique arbitrentur res bellicas majores esse quam urbanas, minucenda est hæc opinio.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. I, ch. 11, sec. 34.

Peace may be taken in peace as well as in war.
(Vel pax cum bellicis armis, vel sine.)

SALLUST, Catharine. Ch. III, sec. 1.

But the real and lasting victories are those of peace, and not of war.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Worship.

Life may be given in many ways,
And loyalty to Truth be sealed
As bravely in the closet as the field.

J. R. LOWELL, Commemoration Ode. St. 5.

Peace hath her victories,
No less renown'd than war.

MILTON, Sonnet: To the Lord General Cromwell.

But dream not helm and harness

The sign of valor true,
Peace hath higher tests of manhood
Than battle ever knew
WHITTIER, The Hero. St. 19.

8 I cease not to advocate peace; even though unjust it is better than the justest war. (Equidem pacem hortari non desino, quæ vel injusta utilior est quam justissimum bellum.)

CICERO, Epistole ad Atticum. Bk. vii, epis. 14.

It hath been said that an unjust peace is to be preferred before a just war

SAMUEL BUTLER, Speech in the Rump Parliament.

A disadvantageous peace is better than the most just war.

ERASMUS, Colloquies.

There never was a good war or a bad peace

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Letter to Quincy, 11
Sept., 1773.

9 Peace is better than war, because in peace the sons bury their fathers, but in war the fathers bury their sons

CÆSAR, to Cambyzes. (BACON, Apophthegms.
No. 149.)

10 War makes thieves and peace hangs them.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jocula Prudentium.

11 It is a general rule of reason, That every man ought to endeavour Peace, as far as he has hope of obtaining it; and when he cannot obtain it, that he may seek and use all helps and advantages of War.

THOMAS HOBBES, Leviathan. Pt. I, ch. 14.

Oh! If I were Queen of France, or, still better,
Pope of Rome,

I would have no fighting men abroad, no weeping maids at home;

All the world should be at peace; or if kings must show their might,

Why, let them who make the quarrels be the only ones to fight.

CHARLES JEFFRIES, Jeannette and Jeanne.

12 Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as be that putteth it off.

OLD TESTAMENT: 1 Kings, xx, 11.

13 You need only a show of war to have peace.

5 "Go, with a song of peace," said Fingal; "go, Ullin, to the king of swords. Tell him that we are mighty in war; that the ghosts of our foes are many."

OSBORN, Carthon, l. 269.

6 I am for peace: but when I speak, they are for war.

Old Testament: Psalms, cxx, 7.

I labour for peace, but when I speak unto them thereof, they make them ready to battle.

Book of Common Prayer: Psalter. Ps., cxx, 6.

7 Peace makes plenty, plenty makes pride. Pride breeds quarrel, and quarrel brings war. War brings spoil, and spoil poverty, Poverty patience, and patience peace: So peace brings war, and war brings peace.

GEORGE PUTtenham, The Arte of English Poesie, l. 217 (1589)

Plenty breeds Pride; Pride, Envy; Envy, War; War, Poverty; Poverty, humble Care, Humility breeds Peace, and Peace breeds Plenty; Thus round the World doth roll alternately

ROBERT HAYMAN, Quoddibets: The World's Whirligigge. (1630)

Poverty begets Effort; Effort begets Success; Success begets Wealth; Wealth begets Pride; Pride begets Strife; Strife begets War, War begets Poverty; Poverty begets Peace; Peace, born of Poverty, begets Effort; Effort again begets Success, and the round continues as before.

ST. CASSO, (African Archeology of Walek.)

Second Servant: This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

First Servant: Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace as far as day does night; it's spritely, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy; muffled, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men.

Second Servant: This so; and as war, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

First Servant: Ay, and it makes men hate one another

Third Servant: Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars for my money.

SHAKESPEARE, Coriolanus. Act iv, sc. 5, l. 234.

I arraign you, war, and charge you to be man's enemy;

Yet in so accusing you, I beg that clemency be shown,

For you are a hideous reality only because of man's spiritual frailties.

Man, while yet invoking your aid, has called you the enemy of peace;

Yet that peace which he craves is, in truth, progress's most bitter foe.

WASHINGTON, GEORGE

7 These are high times when a British general is to take counsel of a Virginia buckskin.

GENERAL EDWARD BRADDOCK, in rejecting George Washington's advice, 1755. (C. F. HOFFMAN, Winter in Far West, i, 67.)

8 Simple and brave, his faith awoke
Ploughmen to struggle with their fate;
Armies won battles when he spoke,
And out of Chaos sprang the state.

COLONEL HENRY (LIGHT-HORSE HENRY) LEE, Resolutions Adopted by the Congress on the Death of Washington, 19 Dec., 1799. These were the concluding words of the resolutions, which were written by Lee and introduced in the House of Representatives by John Marshall. They are often wrongly ascribed to Marshall because he read them and moved their adoption. (Journal of the House of Representatives, 6 Cong., 1 sess., p. 45; Annals of Congress, 6 Cong., 1 sess., col. 204.) The phrase was repeated by Lee in his memorial oration at Philadelphia, 26 Dec., 1799, Marshall, in his Life of Washington (vol. v, p. 765), quotes the resolutions, perhaps from memory, and erroneously gives the last clause as "long in the hearts of his fellow citizens." He states in a footnote that the resolutions were prepared by Lee. (See STEVENSON, Phonetic Spelling Primer. Rev. ed., ch. 19.)

Washington is the mightiest name of earth—long since insignificant in the realm of civil liberty, and insignificant in moral reformation. On that name no eulogy is expected. It cannot be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe pronounce the name, and in its naked deathless splendor leave it shining on.

WATCH

⁷ You own a watch, the invention of the mind,
Though for a single motion 'tis designed,
As well as that which is with greater thought
With various springs, for various motions, wrought.

SIR RICHARD BLACKMORE, The Creation. Bk. iii. See also GOD AND THE WATCHMAKER.

⁸ And I had lent my watch last night to one
That dines to-day at the sheriff's.
BEN JONSON, The Alchemist. Act i, sc. 1.

⁹ It strikes! one, two,
Three, four, five, six. Enough, enough, dear
watch,
Thy pulse hath beat enough. Now sleep and
rest;
Would thou could'st make the time to do so too;

I'll wind thee up no more.
BEN JONSON, Staple of News. Act i, sc. 1.

¹⁰ Ever out of frame,
And never going aright, being a watch,
But being watch'd that it may still go right!
SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 498.

And perchance wind up my sleep,
SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act ii, sc. 5, l. 67.

WATER

I—Water: Apothegms

¹¹ You must not pump spring-water unawares
Upon a gracious public full of nerves.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. iii, l. 72.

¹² We never know the worth of water till the well is dry.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5451.

We never miss the water till the well runs dry.
BURNS, Shropshire Folk-Lore, 590.

You never miss the water till the well runs dry.
ROWLAND BROWN. A song for many years a minstrel favorite.

When the well's dry, we know the worth of water.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1746.

Till taught by pain,
Men really know not what good water's worth.
BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 84.

¹³ The world turns softly
Not to spill its lakes and rivers,
The water is held in its arms
And the sky is held in the water.
What is water, That pours silver,
And can hold the sky?

HILDA CONKLING, Water.

II—Water as a Drink

9 When water chokes you, what are you to drink to wash it down? ("Oras rô ðáwv πλῆν, τί δὲι βιβίῃς.")

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. vii, ch. 2, sec. 10. Referred to as a proverb.

10 The wise man of Miletus [Thales] thus declared

The first of things is water.

J. S. BLACKIE, The Wise Men of Greece: Pythagoras.

Oh! I have gazed into my foaming glass,
And wished that lyre could yet again be strung
Which once rang prophet-like through Greece, and taught her

Misguided sons that the best drink was water.

C. S. CALVELLEY, Bees. St. 8.

11 A cup of cold Adam from the next purling stream.

TOM BROWN, Works. Vol. iv, p. 11.

Here's to old Adam's crystal ale,

Clear sparkling and divine,

Fair H₂O, long may you flow,

We drink your health (in wine).

OLIVER HERFORD, Toast: Adam's Crystal Ale.

We'll drink Adam's ale, and we get it pool measure.

THOMAS HOOD, Drinking Song.

A Rechabite poor Will must live,

And drink of Adam's ale.

MATTHEW PRIOR, The Wandering Pilgrim.

Adam's ale—about the only gift that has descended undefiled from the Garden of Eden! Nature's common carrier—not created in the rottenness of fermentation, not distilled over guilty fires!

EMERY A. STORRES, Water.

12 No poison bubbles on its brink; no blood stains its limpid glass; . . . beautiful, pure, blessed and glorious, forever the same, sparkling, pure water!

JOHN B. GOUGH, Toast to Water.

13 They drank the water clear.
Instead of wine, but yet they made good cheer.

ROBERT HENRYSON, The Town and Country Mouse.

14 No verses can please long, or live, which are written by water drinkers. (Nulla placere diu nec vivere carmina possunt, Quæ scribuntur aquæ potioribus.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. i, epis. 19, l. 2.

15 Now to rivulets from the mountains

Point the rods of fortune-tellers;

Youth perpetual dwells in fountains,—

Not in flasks, and casks, and cellars.

LONGFELLOW, Drinking Song. St. 8.

16 I'm very fond of water;

It ever must delight

Each mother's son and daughter,

When qualified aright.

CHARLES NEAVES, I'm Very Fond of Water.

Pure water is the best of gifts that man to man can bring,

But who am I that I should have the best of anything?

Let princes revel at the pump, let peers with ponds make free,

Whiskey, or wine, or even beer is good enough for me.

UNKNOWN. (Spectator, 31 July, 1920.) Attributed to Lord Neaves, and also to G. W. E. Russell. (For other versions see Notes and Queries, 23 Oct., 1897.)

17 Here's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water which ne'er left man i' the mire.

SHAKESPEARE, Timon of Athens. Act i, sc. 2, 58.

18 'Tis a little thing

To give a cup of water; yet its draught

Of cool refreshment, drained by fevered lips,
May give a shock of pleasure to the frame
More exquisite than when nectarian lips
Renews the joy of life in happiest hours.

THOMAS NOON TALFOURD, Ion. Act I, sc. 2.

The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket that hangs in the well!

SAMUEL WOODWORTH, The Bucket

How sweet from the green mossy brim to receive it,

As poised on the curb it inclined to my lips!
Not a full blushing goblet would tempt me to leave it,

The brightest that beauty or revelry sips

III—Water: Still Waters

Take heed of still waters, they quick pass away.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

Deep waters noiseless are; and this we know,
That chiding streams betray small depths below

ROBERT HERBERT, To His Mistress.

Passions are likened best to floods and streams:
The shallow murmur, but the deep are dumb.

See WALTER RALEIGH, The Silent Lover

The deepest rivers make least din,
The silent soul doth most abound in care.

EARL OF STERLING, Aurora: Song. (1604)

IV—Water: Water and Rock

The unceasing drop of water, as they say,
Will wear a channel in the hardest stone.

BION SAMPYRUS, Fragments No. 2.

By constant dripping a drop of water hollows out a rock. (Hērōnē xōdānēs pōis dēatōs trōdēxēnē.)

CRIGILLUS OF SAMOS, Fragments No. 9.

Not by strength but by constant falling does the drop hollow out the stone. (Gutta cavet lapidem non vi, sed sepe cadendo.)

WATERLOO

The battle of Waterloo and its results appeared to me to put back the clock of the world six centuries.

ROBERT HALL, (GARDNER, Life, Note A.)

1 Every man meets his Waterloo at last.
WENDELL PHILLIPS, Speech on John Brown, 1 Nov., 1859.

When the first just and friendly man appeared on the earth, from that day a fatal Waterloo was visible for all men of pride and fraud and blood.
CHARLES FLETCHER DOLB, The Coming People.

2 John Bull was beat at Waterloo!
They'll swear to that in France.
WINTEROP MACKWORTH PRAED, Waterloo.

3 So great a soldier taught us there
What long-enduring hearts could do
In that world-earthquake, Waterloo!
TENNYSON, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, l. 131.

4 Up, Guards, and at 'em!
Attributed to the DUKE OF WELLINGTON, at the crisis of the battle of Waterloo. Also quoted, "Up, Guards, make ready."
What I must have said, and possibly did say was, "Stand up, Guards!" and then gave the order to attack.
DUKE OF WELLINGTON, Letter to J. W. Croker, answering a letter written 14 March, 1832. (J. W. CROKER, Memoirs, p. 544.)

5 The battle of Waterloo was won on the playing-field of Eton.
DUKE OF WELLINGTON. Wellington's remark was, while watching a cricket match at Eton, "The battle of Waterloo was won here." (See WILLIAM SELWYN, Waterloo, A Lay of Jubilee.)

Soft-heartedness, in times like these,
Shows softness in the upper story!
J. R. LOWELL, Biglow Papers, Ser. ii, No. 7.
18 To be weak is miserable, Doing or suffering.
MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. i, l. 157.

If to be weak is to be wretched—miserable,
As the lost angel by a human voice
Hath mournfully pronounced.
WORDSWORTH, The Excursion, Bk. v, l. 318.

19 Fine by defect, and delicately weak.
POPE, Moral Essays, Epia. ii, l. 43.

20 Every man has his weak side.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.
Men's weaknesses are often necessary to the purposes of life.
MAURICE MAETERLINCK, Joyelle, Act ii.

21 Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires.
SHAKESPEARE, Othello, Act v, sc. 2, l. 270.

22 What 'twas weak to do
'Tis weaker to lament, once being done.
SHELLEY, The Cenci, Act v, sc. 3.

23 In a just cause the weak o'ercome the strong.
(Τὰς τοὺς δικαίους καὶ ὀλίγους νικᾷ πλείους.)
SOPHOCLES, Edipus Coloneus, l. 880.

Throughout all past time, there has been a ceaseless devouring of the weak by the strong.

WEATHER

I—Weather: Apothegms

- 4 And altogether it's very bad weather,
And an unpleasant sort of a night!
R. H. BARKHAM, The Nurse's Story.
- 5 To talk of the weather, it's nothing but folly,
For when it rains on the hill, it shines in the valley.
DENHAM, Proverbs, 17.
- Change of weather is the discourse of fools.
JAMES HOWELL, Proverbs. Pt. II. (1659)
- When two Englishmen meet, their first talk is of the weather.
SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler. No. 11.
- 6 We will not woo foul weather all too soon,
Or nurse November on the lap of June.
THOMAS HOOD, The Plea of the Midsummer Fairies, l. 827.
- 7 Oh, what a blamed uncertain thing
This pesky weather is!
It blew and snow and then it thawed
And now, by jing, it's fix!
PHILANDER JOHNSON, Shooting Stars.
- First it rained, and then it snowed,
Then it fix, and then it thawed,
And then it fix again.
UNKNOWN. An old jingle.
- 8 The weather and my mood have little connection. I have my foggy and my fine days within me.
PASCAL, Pensées. Sec. II, No. 107.
- 9 It hain't no use to grumble and complaine,
It's jest as easy to rejoice;
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain,
Why rain's my choice.
JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, Wet-Weather Talk.

- 10 I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness.
SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act III, sc. 2, l. 16.
- 11 Many can brook the weather that love not the wind.
SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost, iv, 2, 34.

- 13 Plaguy twelve-penny weather.
SWIFT, Letter to Stella, 26 Oct., 1710.
- Shilling weather.
JOHN GAY, Letter to Swift, meaning weather where chair-hire or coach-hire was necessary.
- 14 There is a sumptuous variety about New England weather that compels the stranger's admiration—and regret. . . . In the Spring I have counted one hundred and thirty-six different kinds of weather inside of twenty-four hours.
MARK TWAIN, New England Weather: Speech at Dinner of New England Society, New York, 22 Dec., 1876.
- 14a Everybody talks about the weather, but nobody does anything about it
CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER, Editorial, Hartford, Conn., Courant, c. 1890 Often attributed to Mark Twain.
- I guess it's no use; they still believe Mark Twain said it, despite all my assurances that it was Warner
CHARLES HOPKINS CLARK, Editor of the Courant.
- II—Weather: Some Omens
- 15 A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between.
BACON, Sylva Sylvarum. Cent. ix, sec. 807.
- 16 Fair weather cometh out of the north.
Old Testament: Job, LXXVII, 22.
- 17 When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather: for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today for the sky is red and lowering New Testament: Matthew, xvi, 2-3.
- Evening red and morning grey
Will speed a traveller on his way;
But evening grey and morning red
Will pour down rain upon his head.
DENHAM, Proverbs, 8.
- The evening red, and the morning grey,
Is the sign of a fair day.
MILLA, Essay on Weather, 34.
- 18 A sunshiny shower
Won't last half an hour.

Rain before seven,
Fair by eleven.

The South wind brings wet weather,
The North wind wet and cold together;
The West wind always brings us rain,
The East wind blows it back again.

March winds and April showers
Bring forth May flowers.

Rainbow at night is the sailor's delight;
Rainbow at morning, sailors, take warning.

UNKNOWN, Old Nursery Rhymes.

1
The South wind brings wet weather,
The North wind wet and cold together;
The West wind always brings us rain.
The East wind blows it back again.
If the sun in red doth set
The next day surely will be wet;
If the sun doth set in grey,
The next will be a rainy day.

WEBSTER, DANIEL

2
Men hang out their signs indicative of their respective trades. Shoemakers hang a gigantic shoe; jewelers a monster watch; even the dentist hangs out a gold tooth; but up in Franconi Mountains God Almighty has hung out a sign to show that in New England He makes men.

DANIEL WEBSTER, referring to the Great Stone
Face.

3
Mrs. Hawthorne could not bring herself quite to believe that he [Webster] was not as great as he looked; but Hawthorne had formed a somewhat different opinion. This opinion is set forth, by the by, in the story of "The Great Stone Face."

JULIAN HAWTHORNE, Hawthorne and His Wife.
Vol. I, p. 476.

But now, again, there were reports and many paragraphs in the newspapers, affirming that the likeness of the Great Stone Face had appeared upon the broad shoulders of a certain eminent statesman. . . . Instead of the rich man's wealth and the warrior's sword, he had but a tongue; and it was mightier than both together. So wonderfully eloquent was he, that whatever he might choose to say, his auditors had no choice but to believe him; wrong looked like right, and right like wrong; for when it pleased him, he could make a kind of illuminated fog with his mere breath, and obscure the natural daylight with it.
His tongue, indeed, was a magic instrument;
sometimes it rumbled like thunder; sometimes it warbled like the sweetest music.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, *The Great Stone
Face*.

Such a figure, such an intellect, such a heart, were certainly never combined before to save the world. . . . The front of Jove, the regal, commanding air which cleared a path before him, the voice of thunder and music, the unfathomable eye—all these external signs said, "Here is a Great Man!"

SOPHIA PRABODY HAWTHORNE. (JULIAN HAW-THORNE, Hawthorne and His Wife. Vol. I, p.
476.)

4
How will this look in history?

DANIEL WEBSTER, on receiving a telegram announcing the 57th ballot, Scott 159, Fillmore
112, Webster 21, at the convention of 1852.

5
Have I—wife, son, doctor, friends, are you all there?—have I, on this occasion, said anything unworthy of Daniel Webster?

DANIEL WEBSTER, reported as his last words.
(Fuess, Daniel Webster; ADAMS, The God-like Daniel.) More probably his last words were, "I still live," possibly a reference to the doctor's order to an attendant, "If he is alive in an hour, give him some brandy."

6
Thirty years ago, when Mr. Webster at the bar or in the Senate filled the eyes and minds of young men, you might often hear cited as
Mr. Webster's three rules: first, never to do to-day what he could defer till to-morrow;
secondly, never to do himself what he could make another do for him; and, thirdly, never to pay any debt today. Well, they are none the worse for being already told, in the last generation, of Sheridan; and we find in Grimm's Mémoires that Sheridan got them from the witty D'Argenson.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality.

7
I would not attempt to vie with the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts in a field where every nigger is his peer and every billy-goat his master.

JOHN RANDOLPH OF ROANOKE, of Daniel Webster, who, Randolph believed, had accused him of impotence. (ADAMS, The Godlike Daniel, p. 169.) The fact of Randolph's impotence was verified after his death.

8
Daniel Webster struck me much like a steam-engine in trousers.

SYDNEY SMITH. (LADY HOLLAND, Memoir. Ch.
9. Vol. I, p. 265.)

God Almighty never created a man half as wise
as he looks.

God is only the president of the day, and Webster is his orator.

WEED

1 Call us not weeds; we are flowers of the sea.
E. L. AVELAND, The Mother's Fables.

Still must I sea, for I am as a weed,
Flung from the rock, on Ocean's foam, to sail
Where'er the surge may sweep.

BYRON, Childs Harold. Canto III, st. 2.

2 The flowers are loved, the weeds are spurned,
But for them both the suns are burned;
And when, at last, they fail the day,
The long night folds them all away.

JOHN VANDE CHENY, Weeds and Flowers.

3 Turning our seed-wheat-kennel tares,
To burn-grain thistle, and to vapory darnel, Cockle, wild oats, rough burs, corn-cumbring
tares.

DU BARTAS, Devine Weekes and Workes. Week
ii, day 3. (Sylvester, tr.)

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act v, sc. 2, l. 51.

Bar-docks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act iv, sc. 4, l. 4.

4 What I thought was a flower is only a weed, and is worthless.

LONGFELLOW, Courtship of Miles Standish. Pt. vii.

5 A weed is no more than a flower in disguise,
Which is seen through at once, if love give a man eyes

6 The richest soil, if uncultivated, produces the rankest weeds.

PLUTARCH, Lives: Coriolanus. Ch. 1, sec. 2.

Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act iv, sc. 4, l. 54.

7 He that bides on every weed must needs light on poison.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

One ill weed mays a whole train of pottage.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

The weed o'truges the corn.

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Sentences.

8 Now is the spring, and weeds are shallow, noted.

Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden

And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
SHAKESPEARE, II Henry VI. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 31.

The noisome weeds, which without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard II. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 38.

9 O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair and smell'st so sweet
That the sense aches at thee, would thou hadst ne'er been born!

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 67.

10 "Ay," quoth my uncle Gloucester,
"Small berbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace."

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast, Because sweet flowers are slow and weeds make haste

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act ii, sc. 4, l. 12.

You said that idle weeds are fast in growth.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 103.

11 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds,

Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xciv.

12 Once in a golden hour

I cast to earth a seed.

Up there came a flower,

The people said, a weed.

14 The Duke of Wellington brought to the post of Arm minister immortal fame; a quality of success which would almost seem to include all others.

BRADSHAW DRAKE, Song. Bk. i, ch. 3.

1 No more, surveying with an eye impartial
The long line of the coast,
Shall the gaunt figure of the old Field Marshal
Be seen upon his post!

LONGFELLOW, The Warden of the Cinque Ports.

1a Great Chieftain, who takest such pains
To prove—what is granted, nem. con—
With how moderate a portion of brains
Some heroes contrive to get on.

THOMAS MOORE, Dog-Day Reflections St. 8.

2 The last great Englishman is low.

TENNYSON, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, l. 18.

Foremost captain of his time,
Rich in saving common-sense,
And, as the greatest only are,
In his simplicity sublime.
O good grey head that all men knew,
O voice from which their omens all men drew,
O iron nerve to true occasion true,
O fallen at length that tower of strength
Which stood four-square to all the winds that blew!

For this is England's greatest son,
He that gain'd a hundred fights,
Nor ever lost an English gun. . . .
O saviour of the silver-coated tale. . . .

Ashes to ashes, dust to dust;
He is gone who seem'd so great.—
Gone; but nothing can bereave him
Of the force he made his own
Being here, and we believe him
Something far advanced in State,
And that he wears a truer crown
Than any wreath that man can weave him.
Speak no more of his renown,
Lay your earthly fancies down,
And in the vast cathedral leave him,
God accept him, Christ receive him.

TENNYSON, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, ll. 31, 95, 136, 270.

3 But one thing is needful.

New Testament: Luke, x. 42 (Porro unum est necessarium—Vulgate). Motto of the Duke of Wellington. Also: Virtue fortuna comes, "Good fortune is the companion of valour."

WHITMAN, WALT

5
We go to Whitman for his attitude toward life and the universe; we go to stimulate and fortify our souls; in short for his cosmic philosophy incarnated in a man.

JOHN BURROUGHS, The Last Harvest.

W. W. is the Christ of the modern world—he alone redeems it, justifies it, shows it divine.

JOHN BURROUGHS, Entry in Journal on Death of Whitman.

6
As Caesar Augustus found a Rome of brick and left it a Rome of marble, so Walt Whitman found the everyday world around us a world of familiar substance and left it a world aureoled in mystery.

BENJAMIN DE CASSIER, Phœnix. Vol. xxv,

You egoist, who flaunt yourself
Naked to the world,
You many-sided one;
You preacher of beauty In halting lines
That sweep one before their flood
And bore one to death.

LINCOLN REIS, Walt Whitman.

10
Into "the troughs of Zolaism," as Lord Tenny-son calls them (a phrase which bears rather unduly hard on the quadrupedal pig), I am happy to believe that Mr. Whitman has never dipped a passing nose: he is a writer of something occasionally like English, and a man of something occasionally like genius. . . . Under the dirty clumsy claws of a harper whose plectrum is a muck-rake any tune will become

8 To marry a widow, in slang, means to make one's fortune, but it doesn't always work that way. (Épouser une veuve, en bon français, signifie faire sa fortune: il n'opère pas toujours ce qu'il signifie.)

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Pt. III, No. 72.

9 Did ye hear of the Widow Malone, Ohone!
Who lived in the town of Athlone, Alone?

Oh! she melted the hearts
Of the swains in them parts,

So lovely the Widow Malone.

SAMUEL LOVER, The Widow Malone.

To be poking the fire all alone is a sin,

Och hone! Widow Mackree.

Sure the shovel and tongs

To each other belongs,

While the kettle sings songs

Full of family glee;

Yet alone with your cup,

Like a hermit, you sup,

Och hone! Widow Mackree.

SAMUEL LOVER, Widow Mackree. St. 3.

10 The shameless Chloe placed on the tomb of her seven husbands the inscription, "The work of Chloe." How could she have expressed herself more plainly?

16 A married man can do anything he likes if his wife don't mind. A widower can't be too careful.
BERNARD SHAW, Misalliance, p. 54.

17 A widow must be a mourner.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Living. Ch. II, sec. 3.
Widowhood is pitiable in its solitariness and loss, but amiable and comely when it is adorned with gravity and purity, and not sullied with remembrances of the passed licence, nor with present desires of returning to a second bed.

JEREMY TAYLOR, Holy Living. Ch. II, sec. 3.

II—Widow: Wooing a Widow

18 Do, but dally not, that's the widow's phrase.

LODOWICK BARRY, Ram-Alley. Act II. (1611)

He that will woo a widow must not dally,
He must make hay while the sun doth shine;
He must not stand with her, shall I, shall I,
But boldly say, Widow, thou must be mine.

This is the way to have a widowhood,
By getting to her bed.

NATHANIEL FIELD, Amends for Ladies. Act IV,
sc. 1. (1618)

He that woos a maid must come seldom in her sight,

But he that woos a widow must woo her day and night.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 49. (1670)

He that would woo a maid must feign, lie, and flatter,

But he that woos a widow must down with his britches and at her.

NATHANIEL SMITH, Quakers Spiritual Court,
13. (1660)

He'll have a lusty widow now,
That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day.

I—Wife: Apothegms

Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Marriage and Single Life. (Quoted by Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, iii, 2, 5.)

Every man who is high up loves to think he has done it all himself; and the wife smiles, and lets it go at that. It's only our joke. Every woman knows that.

BARRIE, What Every Woman Knows. Act IV.

Think you, if Laura had been Petrarch's wife,
He would have written sonnets all his life?

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto III, st. 8.

II—Wife: Her Choice

See also Marriage: Advice

I want (who does not want?) a wife,
Affectionate and fair,
To solace all the woes of life,
And all its joys to share;
Of temper sweet, of yielding will,
Of firm yet placid mind,
With all my faults to love me still,
With sentiment refined.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, My Wife's But I Hate.

I want a girl just like the girl that married dear old dad.

WILLIAM BRIDGES, Bill and the old people, song. (1911), Lyrics by William Bridges.

And while the wicket falls behind

Her steps, I thought if I could find
A wife I need not blush to show
I've little further now to go.

WILLIAM BARRETT, Not Far to Go.

To take a wife merely as an agreeable and rational companion, will commonly be found to be a grand mistake.

In choosing a wife and buying a sword we ought not to trust another.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jocula Prudentum. No. 486.

The best or worst thing to man, for this life, Is good or ill choosing his good or ill wife.

JOHN HAYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 2.

When it shall please God to bring thee to man's estate, use great providence and circumspection in choosing thy wife; for thence will spring all thy future good or evil: and it is an action of life, like unto a stratagem of war, wherein a man can err but once.

LOUIS BROTHLEY, Ten Precepts to His Son.

The sum of all that makes a just man happy Consists in the well-choosing of his wife: And there, well to discharge it, does require Equality of years, of birth, of fortune; For beauty being poor and not cried up By birth or wealth, can truly mix with neither, And wealth, when there's such difference in years, And fair descent, must make the yoke uneasy.

PHILIP MASSINGER, A New Way to Pay Old Debts. Act iv, sc. 1.

I fear that in the election of a wife, As in a project of war, so err but once Is he who stands the worst.

THOMAS MASSINGER, Anything for a Quiet Life. Act iv, sc. 1.

Who will have a handsome wife, let him choose her upon Saturday, and not upon Sunday, viz. when she is in her fine clothes.

Come in for Dowry with a wife.

ROBERT HERRICK, Single Life Most Secure.

Being married to those sleepy-souled women is just like playing at cards for nothing: no passion is excited and the time is filled up. I do not, however, envy a fellow one of those honeysuckle wives for my part, as they are but creepers at best and commonly destroy the tree they so tenderly cling about.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (Mrs. PRIOR, Johnsonian).

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all that Adam had left him before he transgressed. she would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have cleft his club to make the fire too. . . . I would to God some scholar would conjure her; for certainly, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in hell as in a sanctuary.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 258.

6 Is any dignity in a wife, any beauty, worth the cost, if she is forever reckoning up her merits against you? (Que tanti gravitas, que forma, ut se tibi semper imparet?)

JEWELL, Sermon. Ser. vi, l. 176.

The better the man, the more desirable as a husband, the less good will be got out of his wife. (After long quips with his Uxor, quibus hoc bonus exordiumque maritum.)

FRASER, Notes. Ser. vi, l. 211.

7 Give up all hope of peace as long as your mother-in-law is alive. (Dauphine the same comédie, 1694.)

JEWELL, Sermon. Ser. vi, l. 211.

With husbands let wives beware: husbands add husband's virtue; but wives add the envy of a wife is quarrelling. (After long quips)

virum, nuptiasque mariti; Hoc deest uxores; dos est uxoria lites.)

1 OVID, Art Amatoria. Bk. ii, l. 153.

2 He who is cursed with an ugly wife sees darkness when he lights the evening lamp.

PALLAS, (Greek Anthology. Bk. xi, epig. 287.)

The husband of the ugly wife

Is better blinded all his life

SADI, The Gulistan. Pt. ii, No 45 (Arnold, tr.)

3 Every one of you hath his particular plague, and my wife is mine, and he is very happy who hath this only

PITTACUS, (PLUTARCH, On the Tranquillity of the Mind.)

But what so pure, which envious tongues will spare?

Some wicked wits have hbell'd all the fair. With matchless impudence they style a wife The dear-bought curse and lawful plague of life; A bosom-serpent, a domestic evil, A night-invasion and a midday-devil Let not the wise these sland'rous words regard, But curse the bones of ev'ry living bard.

Pope, January and May, l. 43.

10 To please a wife, when her occasions call, Would busy the most vigorous of us all. And trust me, sir, the chastest you can choose,

Will ask observance, and exact her dues.

Pope, January and May, l. 210

11 A modernist married a fundamentalist wife, And she led him a catechism and dogma life KERRY PRAXTON, Marital Tragedy.

12 In a wife's lap, as in a grave, Man's airy notions mix with earth.

A. T. QUILLER-COUCH, The Splendid Spirit.

13 Who hath a fair wife needs more than two eyes.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

A fellow almost damn'd in a fair wife.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 1, l. 21.

14 'Tis reason a man that will have a wife should be at the charge of all her trankets, and pay all the scores she sets him on. He that will keep a monkey, 'tis fit he should pay for the glasses she breaks.

Jean Sarras, Table-Talk: Wife.

15 As for my wife, I would you had her spirit in such another; The third of the world is yours, which with a snail.

You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act. ii, sc. 2, l. 62.

- 1 A light wife doth make a heavy husband.
SHAKESPEARE, Merchant of Venice, v, 1, 130.
It is a common thing To have a foolish wife.
SHAKESPEARE, Othello, Act iii, sc. 3, l. 302.

- 2 Richard Penlake was a cheerful man,
Cheerful and frank and free,
But he led a sad life with Rebecca his wife,
For a terrible shrew was she.
SOUTHEY, St. Michael's Charr, St. 2.
A proverb look in mind ye keep,
As good a shrew as is a sheep
For you to take to wife.

THOMAS TUSSEY, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry, l. 157.

- 3 I hold that man the worst of public foes
Who either for his own or children's sake,
To save his blood from scandal, lets the wife
Whom he knows false, abide and rule the house.

She like a new disease, unknown to men,
Creeps, no precaution used, among the crowd,
Makes wicked lightnings of her eyes and saps
The fealty of our friends, and stirs the pulse
With devil's leaps, and poisons half the young.

TENNYSON, Guinevere, l. 509.

- 4 My wife's gone to the country,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
She thought it best; I need a rest,
That's why she went away.
GEORGE WHITING AND IRVING BERLIN, My Wife's Gone to the Country, (1909)

- 4a The clog of all pleasure, the luggage of life,
Is the best can be said for a very good wife.
JOHN WILMOT, EARL OF ROCHESTER, On a Wife.

- 5 Many a man singeth when he home bringeth
His young wife;
If he knew what he brought, weepen he mought,
'Or all his life sigheth.

UNKNOWN, Proverbs of Alfred, (c. 1300)

V—Wife: Her Behavior

- 6 It is not a wife's part to be her husband's judge.
HENRIK IBSEN, Ghost, Act i.

- 7 My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st,
Unargu'd I obey; so God ordains;
God is thy law, thou mine; to know no more
Is woman's happiest knowledge and her praise.
MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. iv, l. 635.

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to mady household good,
And good works in her husband to promote.
MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. ix, l. 232.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Sedat and scandaliz'd by her husband stays;
Who guards her, or with her the worst endures.
MILTON, Paradise Lost, Bk. ix, l. 267.

- 8 Therefore God's universal law
Gave to the man despotic power
Over his female in due awe,
Nor from that right to part an hour,
Smile she or lour.

MILTON, Samson Agonistes, l. 1053.

There's nothing situate under heaven's eye
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects and at their controls:
Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world and wild watery seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then let your will attend on their accords.

SHAKESPEARE, The Comedy of Errors, Act ii, sc. 1, l. 16.

- 9 A good wife should be as a looking-glass to represent her husband's face and passion; if he be pleasant, she should be merry; if he laugh, she should smile; if he look sad, she should participate of his sorrow.

PLUTARCH, Moralia: Advice to a Bride, Sec. 140A. (c. A. D. 95)

I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your countenance, glad or sorry
As I saw it inclined. . . .
I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years, and have been blest
With many children by you.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII, Act ii, sc. 4, l. 23.

- 10 She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.
Old Testament: Proverbs, xxxi, 27.

- 11 A virtuous wife rules her husband by obeying him. (Casta ad virum matrona parendo impetat.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae, No. 105.

She commandeth her husband, in any equal matter, by constant obeying him.

THOMAS FULLER, The Holy and the Profane State: The Good Wife.

She who ne'er answers till a husband cooks,
Or, if she rules him, never shows she rules.
Charms by accepting, by submitting sways,
Yet has her humour most when she obeys.

POPE, Moral Essays, Epist. ii, l. 261.

The cunning wife makes her husband her apron.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 29.

- 12 It's a good horse that never stumbles,
And a good wife that never grumbles.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

The wife that expects to have a good name,
Is always at home, as if she were lame.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

Secreted Women and the House.

- 1 Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine:
Thou art an elm, my husband, I, a vine.
SHAKESPEARE, The Comedy of Errors. Act II,
sc. 2, l. 175.

Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice. Act
III, sc. 2, l. 162.

2 Wives may be merry and yet honest too:
We do not act that often jest and laugh;
'Tis old, but true, Still swine eats all the draff.
SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Act IV, sc. 2, l. 105.

- 3 Such duty as the subject owes the prince
Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
And when she is froward, peevish, sullen,
sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a foul contending rebel
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?
I am ashamed that women are so simple
To offer war when they should kneel for peace,
Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love and obey.
SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act
V, sc. 2, l. 155.

4 That wife alone unsullied credit wins,
Whose virtues can atone her husband's sins,
Thus, while the man has other nymphs in view,
It suits the woman to be doubly true.
SHERIDAN, A Trip to Scarborough. Act III, sc. 3.

VI—Wife: The Unwilling Wife

- 5 I owe a duty where I cannot love.
AFRICA BILLEN, Abdulkor. Act III, sc. 3.
- 6 O wretched is the dame, to whom the sound,
"Your lord will soon return," no pleasure brings.
MATTHEW, Bertram. Act II, sc. 5.
- 7 As a captive I shall follow my captor, and not as a wife a husband. (Victorem captiva se-quer, non nupta maritum.)
OVID, Heroides. Epist. III, l. 69.

8 An unwilling woman given to a man in marriage is not his wife but his enemy. (Hostis est uxor invita quæ ad virum nutum datur.)
PLAUTUS, Stichus. Act I, sc. 2, l. 84.
For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?
Whereas the contrary brighteth love,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI. Act V, sc. 5, l. 52.

- 9 But who may have a more ungracious life
Than a child's bird and a knave's wife?
JOHN SKELTON, Garlande of Laurell, l. 1452.

VII—Wife: Her Control

10 Avoid being affectionate to your wife or quarreling with her in the presence of strangers.
the one savors of folly, the other of madness CLEOBULUS. (DROGENTES LÆRTIUS, Cleobulus.
Sec. 5.)

11 What a pity it is that nobody knows how to manage a wife, but a bachelor.
GEORGE COLMAN THE ELDER, *The Jealous
Wife*. Act IV, sc. 1. (1761)

12 Every man can rule an ill wife but him that has her.
JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish.

13 If you give your wife a yard, she'll take an ell.
THOMAS DEKKER, The Honest Whore. Pt. II,
act II, sc. 2.

14 He knows little who will tell his wife all he knows.

THOMAS FULLER, *The Holy and the Profane
State: The Good Husband*.

15 He that tells his wife news is but newly married.
GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentium.
Who, like a fondling, to his wife tells news,
He hath not yet worn out his marriage shoes.
R. WATKINS, Flamma Sine Fumo.

16 No man should have a secret from his wife. She invariably finds it out.
OSCAR WILDE, An Ideal Husband. Act II.

17 First get absolute conquest over thyself, and then thou wilt easily govern thy wife.
THOMAS FULLER, Intro. ad Prudentiam, II, 26.

18 Who lets his wife go to every feast, and his horse drink at every water, shall have neither good wife nor good horse.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentium.

19 He knocked at his wife's head, until
It opened unto him.

THOMAS HOOD, Tim Turpin.

20 Fasten the bolt; restrain her; but who shall keep the keepers themselves? The wife is cunning, and begins with them. (Pone serram, cohibe, Sed quis custodiet ipsos Custodes?
Cauta est et ab illis incipit uxor.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. VI, l. 347.

21 I do think it is their husbands' faults
If wives do fail. . . . Let husbands know Their wives have sense like them: they see and smell

And have their palates both for sweet and sour,
As husbands have.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act IV, sc. 3, l. 87.

1 Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;

I will be master of what is mine own;
She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my any thing;
And here she stands, touch her whoever dare
SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night, iii, 2, 230.

Why, man, she is mine own,
And I as rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar and the rocks pure gold.
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona,
Act ii, sc. 4, l. 168.

2 Should all despair
That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind
Would hang themselves.
SHAKESPEARE, Winter's Tale. Act i, sc. 2, l. 198.

2a Every evil, but not an evil wife.
Babylonian Talmud Shabbath, fo 11a

3 Who, for his business, from his wife will run,
Takes the best care to have her business done.
WYCHERLEY, The Country Wife Act ii.

4 Break her betimes, and bring her under by force,
Or else the grey mare will be the better horse.
UNKNOWN, Marriage of Wit and Science, ii,
l. 1570)

Look you! The grey mare
Is ill to live with, when her whiny shrills
From tile to scullery, and her small good-man
Shrinks in his arm-chair while the fires of hell
Mix with his hearth.

TENNYSON, The Princess. Pt. v, l. 441.
GRAY MAKE THE BETTER HORSE, see under HORSE.

VIII—Wife: The Breeches and the Crowing Hen

5 "And now, Madam," I addressed her, "we shall try who shall get the breeches."

ANTONIUS MUSA BRASSAVOLUS, My Wife and
I. 1540. (William Beloe, tr.)

I saw many women using hard words to their husbands: some striving for the breeches.
ROBERT GREENE, Works, xi, 219. (1592)

I am sure his wife wore the breeches.
SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Metamorphosis of Ajax,
63. (1596)

Children rule, old men go to school, women wear
the breeches.

ROBERT BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy:
Democritus to the Reader. (1621)

6 Since you have given us the character of a wife who wears the breeches, pray say something of a husband that wears the petticoat.
ANDERSON, The Spectator. No. 482. (1712)

7 You must not look to be my master, sir,

Nor talk in th' house as though you wore
the breeches.

JOHN FLETCHER, Rule a Wife and Have a Wife.
Act II. (1624)

8 For of all wise words of tongue or pen,
The wisest are these: "Leave pants to men."
S. E. KISER, Maud Muller A-Wheel.

9 Between Adam and me the great difference is,

Though a paradise each has been forced to resign,

That he never wore breeches till turned out of his,

While, for want of my breeches, I'm banished from mine.

This was the "Day" foretold by yours and you
In whispers here, and there with beery clamours—

You and your rat-hole spies and blustering crew

Of loud Potsdamers.

And lo, there dawns another, swift and stern,
When on the wheels of wrath, by Justice'
token,

Breaker of God's own Peace, you shall in turn

Yourself be broken.

All life needs for life is possible to will.

TEENYSON, Love and Duty, l. 82.

⁴ The education of the will is the object of our existence.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Courage.

⁵ There is nothing good or evil save in the will. ("Οτι ήν τής προαιρέσεως οὐδὲς ἐστὶν ὄντι ἀγαθόν ὄντι κακόν.")

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. iii, ch. 10, sec. 18.

⁶ To him that will, ways are not wanting.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jaculus Prudentum. No. 726. (1640)

I fall back on my favourite proverb, "Where there's a will there's a way."

BULWER-LYTTON, The Customs. Pt. xviii, ch. 5.

The French form of the proverb is, "Vouloir c'est pouvoir."

When there's a will there's a way.

BERNARD SHAW, Fanny's First Play: Preface.

As little wishes fools supremely stay;

Be there a will, and wisdom finds a way.

GEORGE CRABBE, The Birth of Flattery.

⁷ Where your will is ready, your feet are light.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jaculus Prudentum. No. 444.

A willing heart adds feather to the heel.

JOHN BARTON, De Montfort. Act iii, sc. 2.

⁸ Will will have will though will woe win.

JOHN HAYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. 1, ch. 11.

Will is the cause of woe.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

⁹ I will this, I command this: let my will be the voucher for the deed. (Hoc volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 223.

We'll take the will for the deed.

RABELAIS, Works. Bk. iv, ch. 49.

The will for deed I do accept.

DU BARTAS, Devine Weekes and Workes.

Week ii, day 3. (Sylvester, tr.)

You must take the will for the deed.

¹⁴ The unconquerable will

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. i, l. 106.

The star of the unconquered will,

He rises in my breast,

Serene, and resolute, and still,

And calm, and self-possessed.

LONGFELLOW, The Light of Stars. St. 7.

¹⁵ Even though the power be wanting, yet the will is praiseworthy. (Ut desint vires, tamen est laudanda voluntas.)

OVID, Epistula ex Ponto. Bk. iii, epla. 4, l. 79.

Let not thy Will roar, when thy Power can but whisper.

FULLER, Introductio ad Prudentiam, l. 14.

¹⁶ Our wills and fates do so contrary run

That our devices still are overthrown.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 221.

At war 'twixt will and will not.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure, B, 2, 33.

My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores

Of will and judgement.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, ii, 2, 63.

He wants wit that wants resolved will.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Act ii, sc. 5, l. 12.

¹⁷ What he will he does, and does so much

That proof is call'd impossibility.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 3, 28.

1 Will was his guide, and grief led him astray.
SPENSER, Faerie Queene. Bk. I, canto I, st. 12.

2 O, well for him whose will is strong!
He suffers, but he will not suffer long;
He suffers, but he cannot suffer wrong.

TENNYSON, Will, l. 1.

And I compel all creatures to my will.
TENNYSON, Geraint and Enid, l. 672.

Peggy has a whim of iron.

OLIVER HERFORD, referring to his wife, and explaining that the atrocious hat he was wearing was a whim of hers.

3 Nothing is so easy but it is difficult if you do it against your will. (Nullast tam facilis res quin difficilis siet, Quam invitus facias.)

TERENCE, Heauton Timorumenos, l. 805.

Nothing is troublesome that we do willingly.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, Writings. Vol. xvi, p. 111

4 For though with judgement we on things reflect,
Our will determines, not our intellect.

EDMUND WALLER, Divine Love. Canto I, l. 39.

5 The Will is the Man.

JOHN WILSON, Noctes Ambrosianæ. No. 29.

II—Will: Free Will

6 Where we are free to act, we are also free to refrain from acting, and where we are able to say No we are also able to say Yes. (Kal to ois to pu, kal to nai.)

ARISTOTLE, Nicomachean Ethics. Bk. iii, ch. 5, sec. 2.

7 No one can rob us of our free will. (Αὐτοὶ ἑαυτοῖς οὐ γίνονται.)

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. iii, ch. 22, sec. 105.

The commander of the forces of a large State may be carried off, but the will of even a common man cannot be taken from him.

CONFUCIUS, Analecæ. Bk. ix, ch. 25.

The will cannot be compelled. (Voluntas non potest cogi.)

UNKNOWN. A Latin proverb.

8 To deny the freedom of the will is to make morality impossible.

J. A. FROUDE, Short Studies: Calvinism.

9 All theory is against the freedom of the will, all experience for it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life. 1778.)

Say not the will of man is free

Within the limits of his soul—

Who from his heritage can flee?

Who can his destiny control?

DONALD A. MACKENZIE, Free Will.

10 Good he made thee, but to persevere

He left it in thy power, ordain'd thy will

By nature free, not over-ruled by Fate

Inextricable, or strict necessity.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. v, l. 525.

And blinding Nature fast in Fate,
Left free the human Will.

POPE, Universal Prayer. St. 3.

11 The only way of setting the will free is to deliver it from wilfulness.

J. C. AND A. W. HARR, Guesses at Truth.

12 Our wills are ours, we know not how;

Our wills are ours, to make them thine.

TENNYSON, In Memoriam: Introduction. St. 4.

WILLOW

13 In the misty twilight

You can see their hair,

Weeping water maidens

That were once so fair.

WALTER PRICHARD EATON, The Willows.

14 Willow, in thy breezy moan,
I can hear a deeper tone;

Through thy leaves come whispering low,
Faint sweet sounds of long ago—

Willow, sighing willow!

FELICIA DOROTHEA HERMANS, Willow Song.

15 Willows are weak, yet they bind other wood.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum.

The wind sways the willow. (Feng 'chui liu.)

UNKNOWN. A Chinese proverb.

16 Thou art to all lost love the best,
The only true plant found,

Wherewith young men and maids distrest,
And left of love, are crown'd.

When once the lover's rose is dead,
Or laid aside forlorn,

Then willow-garlands, 'bout the head,
Bedewed with tears, are worn.

ROBERT HERRICK, To the Willow-Tree.

17 We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.

Old Testament - Psalms, cxxxvii, 2.

18 To the brook and the willow that heard him complain,

Ah willow, willow,

Poor Colin sat weeping and told them his pain;
Ah willow, willow; ah willow, willow.

NICHOLAS ROWE, Song: A Willow.

On a tree by a river a little tom-tit

Sang, "Willow, titwillow, titwillow!"

And I said to him, "Dicky-bird, why do you sit Singing, 'Willow, titwillow, titwillow?'"

W. S. GILBERT, The Mikado. Act II.

Phillis hath forsaken me,

Which makes me wear the willow-tree.

UNKNOWN, The Willow-Tree. (PERCY, Rhymes. Ser. III, bk. II, No. 6.)

1 Know ye the willow-tree Whose grey leaves
quaver,
Whispering gloomily To you pale river?
Lady, at even-tide Wander not near it:
They say its branches hide A sad lost spirit!
W. M. THACKERAY, The Willow-Tree.

2 My mother had a maid call'd Barbara;
She was in love, and he she loved proved mad
And did forsake her: she had a song of 'willow';
An old thing 'twas, but it express'd her fortune,
And she died singing it.
SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iv, sc. 3, l. 26.

The poor soul sat sighing by a sycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow;
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee,
Sing willow, willow, willow;
The fresh streams ran by her, and murmur'd her moans;
Sing willow, willow, willow;
Her salt tears fell from her, and soften'd the stones;
Sing willow, willow, willow.
SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act iv, sc. 3, l. 41.

A poor soul sat sighing under a sycamore tree;
O willow, willow, willow!
With his hand on his bosom, his head on his knee:
O willow, willow, willow!
Sing, O the green willow shall be my garland.
UNKNOWN, A Lover's Complaint Being Forsaken of His Love. (PERCY, Reliques. Ser. I, bk. II, No. 8.)

All a green willow is my garland.
JOHN HAYWOOD, The Green Willow.

WILSON, WOODROW

3 And if he failed in part,
Only the years are strong
With patience that waits long;
With wisdom that sees far.
The years shall right the balance tilted wrong,
The years shall set upon his brows a star.
ANS ALDEN, Ave.

4 I served Woodrow Wilson for five years.
He is standing at the throne of a God whose approval he won and has received. As he looks down from there, I say to him: "I did my best. I am doing it now. You are still the captain of my soul."

NEWTON D. BARNES, Speech, Democratic Convention, 26 June, 1920.

5 He was sole out-post for just world and hope
Whom many can name with reason.
He gave his heart, his life, his soul, to hold

Our eyes upon the gleam of lasting peace.
S. OLIVER BARKER, Woodrow Wilson.

6 Spirit long shaping for sublime endeavor,
A Sward of God, the gleaming metal came
From stern Scotch ancestry, where whatsoever
Was true, was pure, was noble, won acclaim.
KATHARINE LEE BATES, Woodrow Wilson.

Here is the man who imposed himself as the supreme head of the continental empire of the United States. Who, further, handled that colossal power as if it were a sword in his hand.
... With this and the power of his thought he ends the war. And then in person he sets out to save humanity by ending war for ever. ... Wilson adventured for the whole of the human race.
Not as a servant, but as a champion. ... In Wilson, the whole of mankind breaks camp, sets out from home and wrestles with the universe and its gods.

WILLIAM BOLITHO, Twelve Against the Gods:
Woodrow Wilson, p. 332.

7 Beleaguere Liberty takes heart again,
Hearing afar the rescuing bugles blow;
And even in the strongholds of the foe
His name becomes the whispered hope of men.
ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON, The Leader.

8 What is the thing about his face
That makes me dream of something dim—
A crucifix at some torn place
And the shell-scarred face of Him?
HERBERT KELLY, The Warrior Passes.

10 Byzantine Logothete

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, referring to Woodrow Wilson, at the time of the latter's many notes to Germany, 1915-17. The officials of Byzantium were called Logothetes. Instead of defending the Empire against the barbarians, they wrote notes to them and were eventually conquered. See BURY, History of the Later Roman Empire; N. Y. Tribune,
13 Dec., 1915.

11 To Woodrow Wilson, the apparent failure, belongs the undying honour, which will grow with the growing centuries, of having saved
the "little child that shall lead them yet."

GEN. JAN CHRISTIAAN SMUTS, Letter, 8 Jan.,
1921. (N. Y. Evening Post, March 2, 1921.)

It was the human spirit itself that failed at Paris. ... It was not Wilson who failed there, but humanity itself. It was not the statesmen that failed, so much as the spirit of the peoples behind them.

GENERAL JAN SMUTS, Letter, 8 Jan., 1921.

I had to deal in the peace conference with two men, one of whom thought he was Napoleon and the other Jesus Christ.

GEORGE L. ECKHARTMAN, referring to Lloyd
George and Woodrow Wilson.

No man ever more fully exemplified the adage that the less is lighter than the more.
MATT BRIDGES, on Wilson. (New Times, v. 776.)

II—Wind: Description

The hushed winds wail with feeble moan
Like infant charity.

JOANNA BAILLE, Orys. Act iii, sc. 1.

Blow, Boreas, foe to human kind!
Blow, blustering, freezing, piercing wind!
Blow, that thy force I may rehearse,
While all my thoughts congeal to verse!

JOHN BANCKS, To Boreas.

Cease, rude Boreas! blustering railer!
G. A. STEVENS, The Storm.

The wind
Sweeps the broad forest in its summer prime,
As when some master-hand exulting sweeps
The keys of some great organ.

BRYANT, Among the Trees, l. 63.

Wind of the sunny south! oh, still delay
In the gay woods and in the golden air,
Like to a good old age released from care,
Journeying, in long serenity, away.

BRYANT, October, l. 5.

And the South Wind—he was dressed
With a ribbon round his breast
That rippled, flapped, and fluttered

In a rictus unrepentant,
And a drapery of mist
From the shoulder to the wrist
Floating backward with the motion of the waving hand he kissed.

JAMES WATSON RUSSELL, The South Wind and the Sun.

Where hast thou wandered, gentle gale, to find

The perfumes thou dost bring?

BRYANT, May Evening. St. 4.

The faint old man shall lean his silver head
To feel thee; thou shalt kiss the child asleep.

BRYANT, Evening Wind. St. 4.

A breeze came wandering from the sky,
Light as the whispers of a dream;
He put the o'erhanging grasses by,
And softly stooped to kiss the stream.
The pretty stream, the flattered stream,
The shy, yet unreluctant stream.

BRYANT, The Wind and Stream. St. 2.

As winds come lightly whispering from the west,
Kissing, not ruffling the blue deep's serene.

BYRON, Child Harold. Canto ii, st. 70.

The winds with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kist.

*MILTON, On the Morning of Christ's Nativity,
l. 64.*

Mildly and soft the western breeze
Just kissed the lake, just stirred the trees.

SCOTT, The Lady of the Lake. Canto iii, st. 2.

There paused to shut the door

A fellow called the Wind,

With mystery before,

And reticence behind.

BLISS CARMAN, At the Granite Gate.

The wind is awake, pretty leaves, pretty
leaves,

Heed not what he says, he deceives, he de-ceives;

Over and over To the lowly clover

He has lisped the same love (and forgotten it, too),

He'll be lisping and pledging to you.

JOHN VANCE CHENEY, The Way of It.

Loud wind, strong wind, sweeping o'er the mountains,

Fresh wind, free wind, blowing from the sea,

Pour forth thy vials like streams from airy fountains,

Draughts of life to me.

DINAH MARIA MULOCK CRAIK, North Wind.

The winds that never moderation knew,
Afraid to blow too much, too faintly blew;
Or out of breath with joy, could not enlarge their straighten'd lungs.

DRYDEN, Æstrea Redux, l. 242.

The wind moans, like a long wail from some despairing soul shut out in the awful storm!

W. H. GIBSON, Pastoral Days: Winter.

Have you heard the wind go "Yo-o-o-o"?

The'st a pitiful sound to hear.

EUGENE FIELD, The Night Wind.

Perhaps the wind
Wails so in winter for the summer's dead,
And all sad sounds are nature's funeral cries
For what has been and is not.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy. Bk. I.

1 No stir of air was there,
Not so much life as on a summer's day
Robs not one light seed from the feather'd grass,
But where the dead leaf fell, there did it
rest.

KEATS, Hyperion. Bk. I, l. 7.

Nought but a lovely sighing of the wind
Along the reedy stream; a half-heard strain,
Full of sweet desolation—balmey pain

KEATS, I Stood Tip-toe Upon a Little Hill.

So near to mute the zephyrs flute
That only leaflets dance.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Outer and Inner. St. 1.

2 I hear the wind among the trees
Playing celestial symphonies;
I see the branches downward bent,
Like keys of some great instrument.

LONGFELLOW, A Day of Sunshine. St. 3.

Chill airs and wintry winds! my ear
Has grown familiar with your song;
I hear it in the opening year,
I listen, and it cheers me long.

LONGFELLOW, Woods in Winter. St. 7.

It's a warm wind, the west wind, full of birds'
cries;
I never hear the west wind but tears are in my eyes.

For it comes from the west lands, the old brown hills.

And April's in the west wind, and daffodils.

JOHN MASEFIELD, The West Wind.

3 While rocking winds are piping loud,
Or usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops 'rom off the eaves.

MILTON, Il Penseroso, l. 126.

4 Never does a wilder song
Steal the breezy lyre along,
When the wind in odours dying
Wooes it with enamour'd sighing.

THOMAS MOORE, To Ross.

5 Mournfully, oh, mournfully,
The midnight wind doth sigh,
Like some sweet plaintive melody
Of ages long gone by.

WILLIAM MOTHERWELL, The Midnight Wind.

The wind was a torrent of darkness among the gusty trees.

ALFRED NOYES, The Highwayman.

6 Who has seen the wind?
Neither you nor I:

But when the trees bow down their heads,
The wind is passing by.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI, Who Has Seen the Wind?

7 The gypsy wind goes down the night;
I hear him lilt his wander-call,
And to the old divine delight
Am I athrall.

CLINTON SCOLLARD, The Gypsy Wind.

8 The swiftest harts have posted you by land;
And winds of all the corners kiss'd your sails,

To make your vessel nimble.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act ii, sc. 4, l. 27.

9 Hamlet: The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

Horatio: It is a nipping and an eager air.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 4, l. 1.

10 The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blustering day.

SHAKESPEARE, I Henry IV. Act v, sc. 1, l. 3.

We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 194.

Blow, winds, and crack your cheeks! rage! blow!
SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 1.

11 A fresher gale
Begins to wave the wood and stir the stream, Sweeping with shadowy gust the fields of corn,
While the quail clamours for his running mate.

Wild as the winds, across the howling waste
Of mighty waters.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Winter, l. 165.

12 I hear the little children of the wind
Crying solitary in lonely places.

WILLIAM SHARP, Little Children of the Wind.

13 O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves
dead

Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
Pestilence-stricken multitudes

SHELLEY, Ode to the West Wind. Sec. 1.

O thou
Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed
The winged seeds, where they lie cold and low,
Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the Spring shall blow
Her clarion o'er the dreaming earth.

SHELLEY, Ode to the West Wind. Sec. 1.

A wind arose among the pines; it shook
The clinging music from their boughs, and then
Low, sweet, faint sounds, like the farewell
Of ghosts,

Were heard: OH, FOLLOW, FOLLOW, FOLLOW ME!

SHELLEY, Prometheus Unbound. Act ii, sc. 1, 156.
And wind, that grand old harper, smote
His thunder-harp of pines.

ALEXANDER SMITH, A Life Drama. Sc. 2.
A wind arose and rush'd upon the South,
And shook the songs, the whispers, and the shrieks
Of the wild woods together; and a Voice
Went with it, "Follow, follow, thou shalt win."

TENNISON, The Princess. Pt. i, l. 96.

2 Sweet and low, sweet and low,

Wind of the western sea,

Low, low, breathe and blow,

Wind of the western sea!

TENNISON, The Princess. Pt. ii, l. 456.

3 Do ye now dare, O winds, without command
Of mine, to mingle earth and sky, and raise confusion thus?

(Jam cælum terramque meo sine aumine, venti, Miscere et tantas audetis tollere moles?)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk i, l. 133. Neptune is addressing the winds, which Æneas, at the request of Juno, has loosed against the Trojan fleet.

WINDOW

4 Each window like a will'y appears,
With beads thrust thro' nail'd by the care.

JOHN HENRY VOSS, who included it in a collection of his poems. (REDLICH, Die Poetischen die Geisterhalter.) Usually ascribed to Martin Luther, but without the slightest warrant, except a passage in his Table-Talk (No. 728). Its first appearance in literature was in 1775, in Der Wandsbecker Bote, of Matthias Claudius, who incorporated it as a toast. Ascribed to Luther by Th. Weyler, who changed "Weiber," women, to "Weib," wife, to make it a little more decorous. (See BÜCHMANN, Gefügelte Worte.)

Then sing, as Martin Luther sang,
As Doctor Martin Luther sang:
"Who loves not wine, woman, and song,
He is a fool his whole life long!"

W. M. THACKERAY, A Credo. St. 1.

Thou art in danger, Cincius, on my word,
To die ere thou hast lived, which were absurd.
Open thine ears to song, thy throat to wine,
Thy arms unto that pretty wife of thine.
Philosophy, I have nowise forgot,
Is deathless, but philosophers are not.

RICHARD GARNETT, Epigram. (After Argentarius.)
In the order named these are the hardest to control: Wine, Women and Song.

FRANKLIN P. ADAMS, The Ancient Three.

One of the oldest and quietest roads to contentment lies through the conventional trinity of wine, woman and song.

REXFORD GUY TUDWELL, Address, Woman's National Democratic Club, Washington, D. C., May, 1934.

Women, money and wine have their pleasure and their poison. (Femme, argent et vin, Ont leur bien et leur venin.)

UNKNOWN, A French proverb.

Baths, wine, and Venus bring decay to our bodies,
But baths, wine, and Venus make life worth living.

(Balnea, vina, Venus corrumpunt corpora nostra, Sed vitam faciunt balnea, Vina, Venus.)

UNKNOWN, Epitaph. (Gautier, Monumenta.)

WINKING

There's a time to wink as well as to see.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1747.

Bean-pods are noisier when dry,
And you always wink with your weakest eye.

BERT HARTZ, The Tale of a Poet.

He that winketh with eye and looketh with the other

I will not trust him though he were my brother.

JOHN HARRISON, Proverbs, Pt. I, ch. 11.

Wink and shut their apprehensions up.

JOHN MARSTON, Antonio's Revenge: Prologue.

Hard must he wink that shuts his eyes from heaven.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Feast for Worms. Sec. III, 3

You may wink and choose.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 216.

Although I wink I am not blind.

CLEMENT ROBINSON, Handful of Pleasant Delights. (1585)

I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act v, sc. 2, l. 333.

Wink each at other; hold the sweet jest up.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act III, sc. 2, l. 239.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xlii.

A wink's as good as a nod with some folks.

DOROTHY WORDSWORTH, Journal. Vol. i, p. 129 (1802)

A nod is as good as a wink.

SCOTT, The Fortunes of Nigel. Ch. 25. (1822)

WINTER

O Winter! bar thine adamant doors:

The north is thine; there hast thou built thy dark,

Deep-founded habitation. Shake not thy roofs,
Nor bend thy pillars with thine iron car.

WILLIAM BLAKE, To Winter.

O Winter, ruler of th' inverted year, . . .

I crown thee king of intimate delights,
Fire-side enjoyments, home-born happiness,
And all the comforts that the lowly roof
Of undisturb'd retirement, and the hours
Of long uninterrupted evening, know.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. iv, l. 120.

See, Winter comes to rule the varied year,
Sullen and sad, with all his rising train—
Vapours, and clouds, and storms.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Winter, l. 1.

Nor from the perfect circle of the year
Can even Winter's crystal gems be spared.

CHRISTOPHER PEASE CRANCH, December.

Hence, rude Winter; crabbed old fellow,
Never merry, never mellow!

Well-a-day! in rain and snow

What will keep one's heart aglow?

ALFRED DOMETT, A Glee for Winter.

But winter ling'ring chills the lap of May.

GOLDSMITH, The Traveller, l. 172.

Winter lingered so long in the lap of Spring, that it occasioned a great deal of talk.

BILL NYE, Spring.

1 Sharp winter is now loosened. (Solitur acris hiems.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. I, ode 4, l. 1.

The sluggish winter returns to us. (Bruma recurrit hiems.)

HORACE, Odes. Bk. iv, ode 7, l. 12.

2 His breath like silver arrows pierced the air,
The naked earth crouched shuddering at his feet,

His finger on all flowing waters sweet
Forbidding lay—motion nor sound was there:—

Nature lay frozen dead,—and still and slow,
A winding sheet fell o'er her body fair,
Flaky and soft, from his wide wings of snow.

FRANCES ANNE KEMBLE, Winter, l. 9.

3 Oh the long and dreary Winter!
Oh the cold and cruel Winter!

LONGFELLOW, The Song of Hiawatha. Pt. II.

Drag on, long night of winter, in whose heart,
Nurse of regret, the dead spring yet has part!

WILLIAM MORRIS, The Earthly Paradise: Fostering of Aslang: Conclusion.

Late February days; and now, at last,
Might you have thought that Winter's woe was past;

So fair the sky was and so soft the air.

WILLIAM MORRIS, The Earthly Paradise: February.

4 Old Winter sad, in snow y-clad,
Is making a doleful din;
But let him howl till he crack his jaw,
We will not let him in. . . .

Come, lads, let's sing, till the rafters ring;
Come, push the can about;—
From our snug fireside this Christmas-tide
We'll keep old Winter out.

THOMAS NOEL, Old Winter.

5 Now there is frost upon the hill
And no leaf stirring in the wood;
The little streams are cold and still;
Never so still has winter stood.

GEORGE O'NEIL, Where It Is Winter.

6 But see, Orion sheds unwholesome dew;
Arise, the pines a noxious shade diffuse;
Sharp Boreas blows, and Nature feels decay,
Time conquers all, and we must Time obey.

POPE, Pastorals: Winter, l. 85.

7 A green winter makes a fat churchyard.
JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 42. (1670)

8 Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference, as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,

Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
"This is no flattery."

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act II, sc. 1, l. 5.

Quake in the present winter's state and wish
The warmer days would come.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act II, sc. 4, l. 5.

Winter tames man, woman and beast.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act IV, sc. 1, l. 24.

9 Winter's not gone yet, if the wild-geese fly that way.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act II, sc. 4, l. 46.

10 When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd and ways are foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit;

Tu-who, a merry note,

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act V, sc. 2, l. 922.

When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act V, sc. 2, l. 931.

11 Winter, which being full of care
Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. IVI.

A sad tale's best for winter;

I have one of sprites and goblins.

SHAKESPEARE, Winter's Tale. Act II, sc. 1, l. 25.

12 Be like the sun and the meadow, which are not in the least concerned about the coming winter.

BERNARD SHAW, An Unsocial Socialist. Ch. 5.

13 If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

SHELLEY, Ode to the West Wind.

Lastly came Winter, clothed all in frieze,
Chattering his teeth for cold that did him chill,
Whilst on his hoary beard his breath did freeze,
And the dull drops, that from his purpled bill
As from a limbeck did adown distill.

SPENSER, Faerie Queene. Bk. VII, canto 7, st. 31.

14 Thus Winter falls.

A heavy gloom oppressive o'er the world,
Through Nature shedding influence malign,
And rouses up the seeds of dark disease.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Winter, l. 57.

Dread Winter spreads his latest glooms,
And reigns tremendous o'er the conquered year.
How dead the vegetable kingdom lies!

How dumb the tuncful! Horror wide extends
His desolate domain.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Winter, l. 1024.

1 Such a winter eve. Now for a mellow fire, some old poet's page, or else serene philosophy.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal.

2 Winter catch what summer getteth.

UNKNOWN, Good Wyfe Wold a Pilgrimage, l.
155. (1460)

Winter draws out what summer laid in.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 5753.

I—Wisdom: Definitions

3 Wisdom cometh by suffering (Τὸν πόθεν μάθος διττα κλυπιδίεσσιν.)

ÆSCHYLUS, Agamemnon, l. 177.

Justice turns her scale, so that wisdom cometh at the price of suffering. (Δίκαι δὲ τοῖς πῶς ταυτοῖς μαθὲν ἐκρίπεται.)

ÆSCHYLUS, Agamemnon, l. 250.

Who knows useful things, not many things, is wise. (Ὁ χρηρὴς εὖδως, οὐχ ὁ πολλά εὖδως, σοφὸν.)

ÆSCHYLUS, Fragment, l. 218.

This is the mark of men just and wise as well—even in calamity not to cherish anger against the gods.

ÆSCHYLUS [?], Fragment, l. 240.

4 Wisdom consists in rising superior both to madness and to common sense, and in lending oneself to the universal illusion without becoming its dupe.

AMIEL, Journal, 11 Dec., 1871.

5 Many are wise in their own ways, that are weak for government or counsel.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. ii.

To be wise by rule and by experience are utterly opposite principles; so that he who is used to the one is unfit for the other.

BACON, De Augmentis Scientiarum. Pt. i, bk. 6.

6 It hath been an opinion that the French are wiser than they seem, and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are; but howsoever it be between nations, certainly it is so between man and man.

BACON, Essays: Of Seeing Wise.

The Italians are wise before the deed; the Germans in the deed; the French after the deed.

GEORGE HARRISON, Jacobs' Brabantium.

Ask, who is wise?—You'll find the self-same man
A sage in France, a madman in Japan;
And here some honest brachlet a springing scold,
Which there had shingled to a cap and holl.

THOMAS MOORE, The Sceptic, l. 17.

7 Wisdom is the knowledge of things human and divine and of the causes by which those things are controlled. (Sapientia est, . . . re-rum divinarum et humanarum causarumque, quibus eæ res continentur, scientia.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. ii, ch. 2, sec. 5.

They call him the wisest man to whose mind that which is required at once occurs. (Sapientissimum esse dicunt eum, cui, quod opus sit, ipsi veniat in mentem.)

CICERO, Pro Cluentio. Ch. 31, sec. 84.

The wise man does nothing of which he can repent, nothing against his will, but does everything nobly, consistently, soberly, rightly.

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. v,
ch. 28, sec. 81.

8 There is this difference between happiness and wisdom: he that thinks himself the happiest man, really is so; but he that thinks himself the wisest is generally the greatest fool.

C. C. COLTON, Lacon. Vol. i, No. 326.

9 In wisdom's ranks he stands the first,
Who stands prepared to meet the worst.

NATHANIEL COTTON, When Dangers.

Extremes of fortune are true wisdom's test,
And he's of men most wise who bears them best.

RICHARD CUMBERLAND, Philemon.

10 Wisdom and goodness are twin-born, one
heart

Must hold both sisters, never seen apart.

COWPER, Expostulation, l. 634.

Wisdom is only found in truth. (Die Weisheit ist nur in der Wahrheit.)

GOETHE, Sprüche in Prosa. Pt. iii.

Wisdom without honesty is mere craft and cox-enage.

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Vita Recta.

11 To finish the moment, to find the journey's end in every step of the road, to live the greatest number of good hours, is wisdom.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Experience.

The invariable mark of wisdom is to see the miraculous in the common.

EMERSON, Nature, Addresses, and Lectures: Prospects.

Raphael paints wisdom, Handel sings it, Phidias carves it, Shakespeare writes it, Wren builds it, Columbus sails it, Luther preaches it, Washington arms it, Watt mechanizes it.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Art.

12 He is a wise man who does not grieve for the things which he has not, but rejoices for those which he has.

EMERSON, Fragment. No. cxxx.

13 Wisdom is full of pity; and thereby

Men pay for too much wisdom with much pain.

His hearth the earth—his hall the azure dome.

R. W. EMERSON, Woodnotes. Pt. III.

21 Wisdom makes but a slow defence against trouble, though at last a sure one.
GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 21.

Sorrow can wait,
For there is magic in the calm estate
Of grief; lo, where the dust compiles
Wisdom lies.

GLADYS CROMWELL, Folded Power.

22 This task, this pursuit [of wisdom] let us speed, small and great, if we would live dear to our country and to ourselves. (Hoc opus, hoc studium, parvi properemus et ampli, si patrie volumus, si nobis vivere cari.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. I, epist. 3, l. 28.

Defer not till to-morrow to be wise,
To-morrow's sun on thee may never rise.
WILLIAM CONGREVE, Letter to Cobham.

Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer;
Next day the fatal precedent will plead;
Thus on, till wisdom is push'd out of life.
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night I, l. 390.

23 The price of wisdom is above rubies.
Old Testament: Job, xxviii, 18.

Wisdom is better than rubies.
Old Testament: Proverbs, vii, 11.

24 Nothing is sweeter than to dwell in the serene temples of the wise, well fortified by learning. (Nil dulcius est, bene quam munita tenere Edita doctrina sapientum templa serena.)

LUCRATIUS, De Rerum Natura. Bk. II, l. 7.

So, from this glittering world with all its fashion,
Its fire and play of men, its stir, its march,
Let me have wisdom, Beauty, wisdom and passion,
Bread to the soul, rain where the summers
parch.

Give me but these, and though the darkness close
Even the night will blossom as the rose.

JOHN MARSHFIELD, On Growing Old.

1 Wisdom is justified of her children.

New Testament: Matthew, xi, 19; Luke, vii, 35.

2 Be famous then

By wisdom; as thy empire must extend,
So let extend thy mind o'er all the world.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. iv, l. 221.

2a May I reckon the wise to be wealthy.
(Πλούσιον διὰ σοφίας τοὺς ἀνθρώπους.)

PLATO, Phaedrus. The prayer with which Socrates concludes the dialogue.

Wisdom is the wealth of the wise.

W. G. BENHAM, Proverbs, p. 876.

3 Think, to be happy; to be great, be wise:
Content of spirit must from science flow,
For 'tis a godlike attribute to know.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Solomon. Bk. i, l. 41.

4 Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding.

Old Testament: Proverbs, iv, 7.

A wise man is strong; yea, a man of knowledge increaseth strength.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xiv, 5.

Wisdom is always an overmatch for strength.

PHÆDRUS, Fables. Bk. i, fab. 13.

5 Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, iii, 13, 79.

6 She that in wisdom never was so frail
To change the cod's head for the salmon's tail.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 155.

7 To wisdom he's a fool that will not yield.

SHAKESPEARE, Pericles. Act ii, sc. 4, l. 54.

8 By Wisdom wealth is won;
But riches purchased wisdom yet for none.

BAYARD TAYLOR, The Wisdom of All.

10 How great a thing is wisdom! I never come near you but I go away wiser. (Quantum est sapere! Numquam accedo, quin abs te abeam doctior.)

TERENCE, Eunuchus, l. 791. (Act iv, sc. 7.)

11 Wisdom alone is true ambition's aim.

Wisdom the source of virtue, and of fame,
Obtained with labour, for mankind employed,
And then, when meet you share it, best enjoyed.

WILLIAM WHITEHEAD, On Nobility.

12 Wisdom is the gray hair unto men, and an unspotted life is old age.

Apocrypha: Wisdom of Solomon, iv, 9.

Wisdom is glorious and never fadeth away: yea,
she is easily seen of them that love her, and found
of such as seek her.

Apocrypha: Wisdom of Solomon, vi, 12.

13 Wisdom, the sole artificer of bliss.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Satire vi, l. 94.

Can gold calm passion, or make reason shine?
Can we dig peace, or wisdom, from the mine?
Wisdom to gold prefer; for 'tis much less
To make our fortune than our happiness.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Satire vi, l. 291.

Wisdom, tho' richer than Peruvian mines,
And sweeter than the sweet ambrosial hive,
What is she, but the means of happiness?

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night ii, l. 498.

But wisdom, awful wisdom! which inspects,
Discerns, compares, weighs, separates, infers,
Seizes the right, and holds it to the last.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 1247.

IV—Wisdom: Its Emptiness

14 The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God.

New Testament: I Corinthians, iii, 19.

15 Some people are more nice than wise.
COWPER, Mutual Forbearance, l. 20.

God never meant that man should scale the heavens

By strides of human wisdom.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. iii, l. 221.

16 In much wisdom is much grief.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, i, 18.

17 They who travel in pursuit of wisdom walk only in a circle, and, after all their labour, at last return to their pristine ignorance.

GOLDSMITH, The Citizen of the World. No. 37.

To say the truth, I was tired of being always wise.

GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 10.

18 Wisdom's sullen pomp.

MATTHEW GREEN, The Spleen, l. 216.

19 How prone to doubt, how cautious are the wise!

HOMER, Odyssey. Bk. xiii, l. 375. (Pope, tr.)

20 Wisdom and wit now is not worse a kerse.

WILLIAM LANGLAND, Piers Plowman: The Vision of Do-Well. Kerse is Middle English for crop.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ii, l. 565.
- 2 Tell wisdom she entangles
Herself in overwisdoms.
SIR WALTER RALEIGH, The Lie.
- 3 O world, thou choosest not the better part!
It is not wisdom to be only wise,
And on the inward vision close the eyes,
But it is wisdom to believe the heart.
GEORGE SANTAYANA, O World.
Oh, thriftlessness of dream and guess!
Oh, wisdom which is foolishness!
Why idly seek from outward things
The answer inward silence brings?
WHITTIER, Questions of Life.
- 4 Take thy balance if thou be so wise,
And weigh the wind that under heaven doth blow;
Or weigh the light that in the east doth rise;
Or weigh the thought that from man's mind
doth flow.
SPENCER, Faerie Queene. Bk. v, canto ii, st. 43.

learned anything of absolute value by living.
H. D. THOREAU, Walden. Ch. 1.
- 16 Disasters, do the best we can,
Will reach both great and small;
And he is oft the wisest man
Who is not wise at all.
WORDSWORTH, The Oak and the Broom. St. 7.

VI—Wisdom, After the Event

- 17 The wise man must be wise before, not after, the event. (Οδ μεταροει, αλλά προροειν χρη τών άδρα τών σοφών.)
EPICHRAMUS, Fabulae Incertae. Frag. 5.
- 18 After the event, even a fool is wise. (Πεχθόν δέ τε νήπιος ήγώ.)
HOMER, Iliad. Bk. xvii, l. 32.

την άκην ύμιν.)
SOPHOCLES, Antigone, l. 1270.
- 21 Their hindsight was better than their foresight.
HENRY WARD BEECHER [?].
- 22 If a man had half as much foresight as he has twice as much hindsight, he'd be a lot better off.
ROBERT J. BURDETTE, Hawkeyes. Sometimes quoted, "If our foresight were as good as our hindsight, we'd be better off a damn sight."
- 23 Away, thou strange justifier of thyself, to be wiser than thou wert, by the event.

WIT

2.—Wit: Definitions

10 Wit without an employment is a disease.

BURTON, Anatomy of Melancholy. Pt. I, sec.
II, mem. 2, para. 6.

11 A witty thing never excited laughter; it pleases only the mind, and never distorts the countenance.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 9 March, 1748

True wit never made us laugh.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Social Aims.

He is always laughing, for he has an infinite deal of wit.

JOSEPH ADDISON, The Spectator. No. 475.

I can't say whether we had more wit amongst us now than usual, but I am certain we had more laughing, which answered the end as well.

GOLDSMITH, The Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 32.

12 If you have wit, use it to please, and not to hurt: you may shine like the sun in the temperate zones, without scorching.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 5 Sept., 1748

If God gives you wit . . . wear it like your sword in the scabbard, and do not brandish it to the terror of the whole company. . . . A wise man will live as much within his wit as his income.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 July, 1752.

I have too thoughtful a wit: like a penknife in too narrow a sheath, too sharp for its body.

GEORGE HERBERT. (WALTON, Life of Herbert.)

13 Wit is so shining a quality that everybody admires it; most people aim at it, all people fear it, and few love it except in themselves

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 21 July, 1752.

14 A wit should no more be sincere than a woman constant; one argues a decay of parts, as t'other of beauty.

CORGREVE, The Way of the World. Act I, sc. 6.

15 Thus reputation is a spur to wit,
And some wits flag through fear of losing it.

COWPER, Table Talk, l. 520.

16 Wit makes its own welcome, and levels all distinctions. No dignity, no learning, no force of character, can make any stand against good wit.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: The Comic.

17 Nothing more smooth than glass, yet nothing more brittle;

Nothing more fine than wit, yet nothing more fickle.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6472.

18 There must be more malice than love in the hearts of all wits.

B. R. HAYDEN, Table Talk.

19 Wit is the salt of conversation, not the food.
WILLIAM HAZLITT, *Lectures on the English
Comic Writers*. Lecture I.

Those who cannot miss an opportunity of saying a good thing . . . are not to be trusted with the management of any great question.

WILLIAM HAZLITT, Characteristics, p. 59.

1 Wit's an unruly engine, wildly striking
Sometimes a friend, sometimes the engineer.
Hast thou the knack? pamper it not with liking:
But if thou want it, buy it not too dear.

Many affecting wit beyond their power,
Have got to be a dear fool for an hour.

GEORGE HERBERT, The Church-Porch. St. 41.

2 Wit is the clash and reconciliation of incongruities; the meeting of extremes round a corner.

LEIGH HUNT, Wit and Humour.

3 Wit, at its best, consists in the terse intrusion into an atmosphere of serene mental habit of some uncompromising truth.

PHILANDER JOHNSON, Columbists' Confessional. (Everybody's Magazine, May, 1920.)

4 Ev'n wit's a burthen, when it talks too long.

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 573. (Dryden, tr.)

A man does not please long when he has only one species of wit. (On ne plaist pas longtemps quand on n'a qu'une sorte d'esprit.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 413.

One wit, like a knuckle of ham in soup, gives a zest and flavour to the dish, but more than one serves only to spoil the potage.

SMOLLETT, Humphrey Clinker.

5 Wit is nothing worth till it be dear bought.

HENRY MEDWALL, Nature. Pt. ii, l. 1292. (c. 1500)

It hath been an old said saw . . . that wit is better if it be the dearer bought.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 34.

Bought wit is best, but may cost too much.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 1011.

Bought wit is dear.

GEORGE GASCOIGNE, Poems.

6 Impromptu is truly the touchstone of wit. (L'impromptu est justement la pierre de touche de l'esprit.)

MOLIERE, Les Précieuses Ridicules. Sc. ix, l. 152.

7 Raillery is a mode of speaking in favor of one's wit at the expense of one's better nature. (La raillerie est un discours en faveur de son esprit contre son bon naturel.)

MONTESQUIEU, Pensées Diverses.

8 Wit is the most rascally, contemptible, beggarly thing on the face of the earth.

ARTHUR MURPHY, The Apprentice.

9 Wit when temperate is pleasing, when unbridled it offends. (Temperate suaves sunt argutie: Immodice offendunt.)

PRÆPÆR, Fables. Bk. v, fab. 5, l. 41.

10 For wit and judgment often are at strife,
Tho' meant each other's aid, like man and wife.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. i, l. 82.

11 True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 97.

Wit is that which has been often thought, but never before was well expressed.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Paraphrase of Pope. (Lives of the Poets: Cowley.)

So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit:
For works may have more wit than does them good,

As bodies perish thro' excess of blood.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 102.

12 If faith itself has different dresses worn,
What wondrous modes in wit should take their turn?

Off, leaving what is natural and fit,
The current folly proves the ready wit;
And authors think their reputation safe,
Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh.

POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. ii, l. 246.

13 Wit is folly unless a wise man hath the keeping of it.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, p. 174.

14 Wit, like tierce claret, when 't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all,
But, in its full perfection of decay,
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play.

CHARLES SACKVILLE, To Mr. Edward Howard.

15 Wit and wisdom are born with a man.

JOHN SELDEN, Table-Talk; Learning.

16 Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft;
And wit depends on dilatory time.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 378.

17 There's no possibility of being witty without a little ill-nature; the malice of a good thing is the barb that makes it stick.

SHERIDAN, The School for Scandal. Act i, sc. 1.

Nae wit without a portion o' impertinence.

JOHN WILSON, Noctes Ambrosianae.

18 Surprise is so essential an ingredient of wit that no wit will bear repetition;—at least the original electrical feeling produced by any piece of wit can never be renewed.

SYDNEY SMITH, Lectures on Moral Philosophy, No. 10.

19 Wit consists in knowing the resemblance of things which differ, and the difference of things which are alike.

MADAME DE STAEL, Germany. Pt. iii, ch. 6.

1 It is with wits as with razors, which are never so apt to cut those they are employed on as when they have lost their edge.

SWIFT, Tale of a Tub: Author's Preface.

As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set:
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. ii, l. 119.

Don't put too fine a point to your wit, for fear it should get blunted.

CERVANTES, Exemplary Novels: Little Gypsy.

2 Wit rules the heavens, discretion guides the skies.

3 Backstair wit. (Esprit de l'escalier.)

M. DE TRÉVILLE. (PIERRE NICOLE, King's English, p. 32, note.)

I never have any wit until I am below stairs. (Je n'ai jamais d'esprit qu'au bas de l'escalier.)

LA BRUYÈRE, according to J.-J. Rousseau.

4 Lucian, well skill'd in scoffing, this has writ:
Friend, that's your folly which you think your wit;

This you vent oft, void both of wit and fear,
Meaning another, when yourself you jeer.

ISAAC WALTON, The Compleat Angler. Ch. 1.

5 Wit is more necessary than beauty; and I think no young woman ugly that has it, and no handsome woman agreeable without it.

WYCHERLEY, The Country Wife. Act i, sc. 1.

6 Against their wills what numbers ruin shun,
Purely through want of wit to be undone!
Nature has shown, by making it so rare,
That wit 's a jewel which we need not wear.

YOUNG, Epistle to Mr. Pope. Epist. ii, l. 80.

7 Wit, how delicious to man's dainty taste!

'T is precious, as a vehicle of sense;

But, as its substitute, a dire disease.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 1232.

Wit, widow'd of good sense, is worse than nought.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 1264.

8 There is nothing breaks so many friendships as a difference of opinion as to what constitutes wit.

ELIZABETH HUBBARD, Epigrams.

Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit; by and by it will strike.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 12.

I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act i, sc. 3, l. 89.

For what says Quinapalus? "Better a witty fool than a foolish wit."

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act i, sc. 5, l. 39. "Quinapalus" is an imaginary author.

I am a fool, I know it; and yet, heav'n help me, I'm poor enough to be a wit.

CONGREVE, Love for Love. Act i, sc. 1.

His wit ran him out of his money, and now his poverty has run him out of his wits.

CONGREVE, Love for Love. Act v, sc. 2.

For though he is a wit, he is no fool.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. ii, l. 106.

Of course it's all Tommy rot; but it's so brilliant, you know! How the dickens do you think of such things?

G. B. SHAW, John Bull's Other Island. Act 1.

III—Wit: Lack of Wit

We grant, although he had much wit, H' was very shy of using it, As being loth to wear it out,

And therefore bore it not about; Unless on holy days or so, As men their best apparel do.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto 1, l. 45.

He says but little, and that little said Owes all its weight, like loaded dice, to lead. His wit invites you by his looks to come, But when you knock it never is at home.

COWLEY, Conversation, l. 301.

You beat your pate, and fancy wit will come: Knock as you please, there's nobody at home.

POPE, Epigram: As Empty House.

Men of quality are above wit.

JOHN COWLEY, Sir Courtenay Nice.

Who can prove Wit to be witty when with deeper ground

Dulness intuitive declares wit dull?

GEORGE ELIOT, A College Breakfast-party.

1 Of all wit's uses the main one
Is to live well with who has none.

R. W. EMERSON, Life.

2 Their heads sometimes so little that there is no room for wit; sometimes so long, that there is no wit for so much room.

Two to a wit, there are a set of them.

BEN JONSON, The Staple of News. Act I, sc. 1.

4 He must be a dull Fellow indeed, whom neither Love, Malice, nor Necessity, can inspire with Wit.

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Pt. iv.

5 No one shall have wit save we and our friends,
(Nul n'aura de l'esprit, hors nous et nos amis.)

MOLIÈRE, Les Femmes Savantes. Act III, sc. 2.

6 Want o' wit is waur than want o' siller.

JOHN RAY, Proverbs: Scottish.

7 They have a plentiful lack of wit.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act II, sc. 2, l. 202.

What a pretty thing man is when he goes in his doublet and hose and leaves off his wit.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act
v, sc. 1, l. 210.

8 Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act I, sc. 3, l. 88.

WITCH, WITCHCRAFT

9 I have ever believed, and do now know, that there are Witches: they that are in doubt of these . . . are obliquely and upon consequence a sort, not of Infidels, but Atheists.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. i,
sec. 30.

10 And, vow! Tam saw an unco sight!
Warlocks and witches in a dance: . . .
Coffins stood round, like open presses,
That shaw'd the dead in their last dresses;
And, by some devilish catnap sleight,
Each in its cauld hand held a light:

Nor customary suits of solemn black,
Nor windy suspiration of forced breath,
No, nor the fruitful river in the eye,
Nor the dejected 'haviour of the visage,
Together with all forms, moods, shapes of grief,

That can denote me truly; these indeed seem,
For they are actions that a man might play,
But I have that within which passeth show;
These-but the trappings and the suits of woe.
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 2, l. 76.

My grief lies all within;
And these external manners of laments
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief
That swells with silence in the tortured soul.

EDMUND BURKE, Reflections on the Revolution in France Burke is quoting the opinions of the revolutionists.

³ Women are only children of a larger growth.
LOUIS CHASTELLER, Letters, 5 Sept., 1748.

Women who are either indisputably beautiful, or indisputably ugly, are best flattered upon the score of their understandings; but those who are in a state of mediocrity, are best flattered upon their beauty, or at least their graces; for every woman who is not absolutely ugly thinks herself handsome.
LOUIS CHASTELLER, Letters, 5 Sept., 1748.

Women are to be talked to as below men, and above children.

LOUIS CHASTELLER, Letters, 20 Sept., 1748.

⁴ What is woman? only one of Nature's agreeable blunders.

HARRISON COWLEY, Who's the Deaf? Act ii, 2.

12 God, when he made the first woman . . . made her not of the head of Adam, for she should not climb to great lordship; . . . also certes, God made not woman of the foot of Adam, for she should not be holden too low; for she can not patiently suffer; but God made woman of the rib of Adam, for woman should be fellow unto man.

CHAUCE, The Persones Tale. Sec. 79.

That the woman was made of a rib out of the side of Adam; not out of his feet to be trampled upon by him, but out of his side to be equal with him, under his arm to be protected, and near his heart to be loved.

MATTHEW HENRY, Note on Genesis, ii, 21, 22.

The woman was not taken

From Adam's head, we know,

To show she must not rule him—

'Tis evidently so

The woman she was taken

From under Adam's arm,

So she must be protected

From injuries and harm.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Adam and Eve's Wedding

Song. Written for Sarah Haggard on her marriage to Aaron Grigsby.

Not from his head was woman took,

As made her husband to overlook;

Not from his feet, as one designed

The footstool of the stronger kind;

But fashioned for himself, a bride;

An equal, taken from his side.

CHARLES WESLEY, Short Hymns on Select Passages of the Holy Scriptures.

She was not made out of his head, Sir,

To rule and to govern the man;

Not was she made out of his feet, Sir,
By man, to be trampled upon . . .
But she did come forth from his side, Sir,
His equal and partner to be;

And now they are coupled together,
She oft proves the top of the tree.

V—Woman: Saint Abroad, Devil at Home

A woman is a fury and a hurtful spirit in the house, an angel in the church, an ape in the bed, a mule unbridled in the field, and a goat in the garden.

BERCHER, Nobility of Women, 127. (1559)

We limit the comely parts of a woman to consist in four points: that is to be a shrew in the kitchen, a saint in the church, an angel at the board, and an ape in the bed, as the Chronicle reports by Mistress Shore, paramour to King Edward the Fourth.

GEORGE PUTTENHAM, English Poesie, 299. (1589)

According to that wise saying, women be saints in the church, angels in the street, devils in the kitchen, and apes in your bed.

THOMAS MIDDLETON, Blurt, Master-Constable.

Act iii, sc. 3. (1602)

You are pictures out of doors,
 Bells in your parlours, wild-cats in your kitchens,
 Saints in your injuries, devils being offended,
 Players in your housewifery, and housewives in your beds.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 110. (1604)

At home like devils they be,
 Abroad like angels pure.

EDWARD MOORE, Defence of Women, l. 474. (1560)

God save us all from wives who are angels in the street, saints in the church, and devils at home.

C. H. SPURGEON, John Ploughman. Ch. 13.

They are all saints abroad, but ask their makes what they are at home.

C. H. SPURGEON, Ploughman's Pictures, 67.

Women are in churches, saints; abroad, angels; at home, devils.

GEORGE WILKINS, The Miseries of Enforced Marriage. Act i.

As holy as saints in church they be,

And in street as angels they were,

At home, for all their hypocrisy,

A devilish life they lead all the year.

UNKNOWN, School House of Women, l. 658. (1542)

A woman is an angel at ten, a saint at fifteen, a devil at forty, and a witch at fourscore.

Loveliest of women! Heav'n is in thy soul,
 Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
 Bright'ning each other: thou art all divine.

ADDISON, Cato. Act iii, sc. 2.

Where women are, the better things are implied if not spoken.

A. B. ALCOCK, Table Talk: Conversation.

Not she with trait'rous kiss her Saviour stung,
 Not she denied Him with unholy tongue;
 She, while apostles shrank, could dangers brave,

Last at the cross and earliest at the grave.

EATON STANNARD BARNETT, Woman. Pt. i, l. 141.

There's a woman like a dewdrop, she's so purer than the purest;
 And her noble heart's the noblest, yes, and her sure faith's the surest.

ROBERT BROWNING, Blot in the 'Scutcheon, l. 3.

Dear, dead women, with such hair, too—
 what's become of all the gold

Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old.

ROBERT BROWNING, A Toccata of Galuppi's.

Round and round, like a dance of snow
 In a dazzling drift, as its guardians go
 Floating the women faded for ages,
 Sculptured in stone, on the poet's pages.
 Then follow women fresh and gay,
 Living and loving and loved to-day.

ROBERT BROWNING, Women and Roots.

All loved and lovely women dear to rhyme:

Without the smile from partial beauty won,
Oh! what were man?—a world without a sun!
CAMPELL, The Pleasures of Hope. Pt. ii, l. 23.
The world was sad; the garden was a wild;
And man, the hermit, sigh'd—till woman smiled!
CAMPELL, The Pleasures of Hope. Pt. ii, l. 37.

If the heart of a man is depressed with cares,
The mist is dispell'd when a woman appears.
JOHN GAY, The Beggar's Opera. Act ii, sc. 1.

For with affections warm, intense, refined,
She mixed such calm and holy strength of mind.

That, like Heaven's image in the smiling brook,
Celestial peace was pictured in her look.
THOMAS CAMPBELL, Theodoric. l. 188.

A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent!
BYRON, She Walks in Beauty.

She was a queen of noble Nature's crowning,
A smile of hers was like an act of grace.
HARTLEY COLLENDER, The Solitary-Hearted.

Women may be whole oceans deeper than we are, but they are also a whole paradise better.
She may have got us out of Eden, but as a compensation she makes the earth very pleasant.

JOHN QUINCY HOPKINS, Embassador. Act iii.

The most precious possession that ever comes to a man in this world is a woman's heart.
J. G. HOLLAND, Lessons in Life: Perverseness.

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the Hand above—
A woman's heart, and a woman's life,
And a woman's wonderful love?

And where she went, the flowers took thickest
root,

As she had sow'd them with her odoriferous foot.
BEN JONSON, The Sad Shepherd. Act i, sc. 1.

Her face betokened all things dear and good,
The light of somewhat yet to come was there
Asleep, and waiting for the opening day,
When childish thoughts, like flowers, would drift
away.

JEAN INGELW, Margaret in the Xebec. St. 57.

Without women the beginning of our life would be deprived of assistance, the middle portion of pleasure, and the end of consolation. (Sans les femmes le commencement de notre vie seroit privé de secours, le milieu de plaisirs, et le fin de consolation.)

VIKTOR J. E. JOUV, Maximes.

There in the fane a beauteous creature stands,
The first best work of the Creator's hands,
Whose slender limbs inadequately bear
A full-orbed bosom and a weight of care;
Whose teeth like pearls, whose lips like cherries, show,

And fawn-like eyes still tremble as they glow.

8 Here rests a Woman, good without pretence,
Bless'd with plain Reason and with sober
Sense:

No Conquests she but o'er herself desired,

No Arts essay'd but not to be admired. . . .

So unaffected, so composed, a mind,

So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,

Heav'n, as its purest gold, by Tortures tried:

The Saint sustain'd it, but the Woman died.

But woe and women can.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 355.

3 Amongst women (some will say) there is but two faults, and those are, they can neither do nor say well.

BARNABE RICH, Faultes. Fo. 23. (1606)

Men have many faults;

Poor women have but two:

There's nothing good they say,

And nothing right they do.

UNKNOWN, Women's Faults.

4 Parasite women.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Metropolitan Magazine, May, 1916; also Foes of Our Own Household.

5 Because of their vices, women have ceased to deserve the privileges of their sex; they have put off their womanly nature and are therefore condemned to suffer the diseases of men.

SENECA, Epistulae ad Lucilium. Epis. xcv, 21.

6 There's no motion
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lust and rank thoughts, hers; revenges, hers;
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, disdain,

Nice longings, slanders, mutability,
All faults that may be named, nay, that hell knows,

Why, hers, in part or all; but rather, all;
For even to vice

They are not constant, but are changing still
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act ii, sc. 5, l. 20.

You jig, you amble, and you limp, and nickname God's creatures, and make your wantonness your ignorance. Go to, I'll no more on 't; it hath made me mad.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 151.

So curses all Eve's daughters, of what complexion soever.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Act iv, sc. 2, l. 24.

7 Beautiful tyrant! bend angelical!

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 75.

Her only fault, and that is faults enough,
Is that she is intolerable curst
And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure
That, were my state far woner than it is,
I would not wed her for a mine of gold.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act i, sc. 2, l. 88.

8 Is folly then so old? Why, let me see,—
About what time of life may folly be?

Oh! she was born, by nicest calculation,
One moment after woman's first creation.

W. R. SPENCER, Fashionable Friends: Prologue.

9 The women were proposed to be taxed according to their beauty and skill in dressing, . . . but constancy, charity, good sense, and good nature were not rated, because they would not bear the charge of collecting.

SWIFT, Gulliver's Travels: Voyage to Laputa.

10 There are some meannesses which are too mean even for man—woman, lovely woman alone, can venture to commit them.

THACKERAY, A Shabby Gentle Story. Ch. 3.

In point of morals the average woman is, even for business, too crooked.

STEPHEN LEACOCK, The Woman Question.

11 Regard the society of women as a necessary unpleasantness of social life, and avoid it as much as possible.

LEO TOLSTOY, Diary.

A woman without a laugh in her . . . is the greatest bore in existence.

THACKERAY, Sketches. Pt. iii.

12 Most women have small waists the world throughout,

But their desires are thousand miles about.

CYRIL TOURNEUR, The Revengers. Act v.

13 Woman is man's confusion. (Mulier est hominis confusio.)

VINCENT OF BEAUVAIS, Speculum Majus. Sec. 346.

Mulier est hominis confusio;
Madame, the sentence of this Latin is,
Woman is man's joy and all his bliss.

CHAUCER, The Nonne Preestes Tale, l. 344. A humorous mistranslation.

14 Forbear to attribute to all women the guilt of a few. Let each be judged on her own merits. (Parcite paucorum diffundere crimen in omnes; Spectetur meritis queque puella suis.)

OWEN, Arx Amatoria. Bk. iii, l. 9.

15 I thank God I am not a woman, to be teased with so many giddy offences as he hath generally taxed their whole sex withal.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act III, sc. 2, l. 366.

VIII--WOMAN: Her Nature

Divination seems heightened and raised to its highest power in woman.

ALFRED BRONSON ALCOCK, Concord Days: August.

But there's wisdom in women, of more than they have known,

And thoughts go blowing through them, ere winter than their own.

RUPERT BROOKE, There's Wisdom in Women.

Oh, there are many things that women know, That no one tells them, no one needs to tell.

ROSSELL MERCEUR MONTGOMERY, Ulysses Returns.

Forgetting is Woman's First and Greatest Art.

RICHARD ALDINGTON, The Colonel's Daughter, p. 138.

With women the heart argues, not the mind.

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Merope, l. 341.

Ay, me, how weak a thing

The heart of woman is!

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Cæsar. Act II, sc. 4, l. 39.

Poets, beware! never compare Women to aught in earth or in air.

THOMAS HAYNES BAYLY, Song.

Yet when I hold her best, she's but a woman, As full of frailty as of faith; a poor slight woman,

And her best thoughts but weak fortifications.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, The Little French Lawyer. Act II, sc. 2.

With my frailty don't upbraid me, I am woman as you made me; Cautious doubting or despairing, Rashly trusting, idly fearing.

If obtaining, Still complaining; If consenting, Still repenting.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, Scandal to Jupiter.

Women are never stronger than when they are themselves with their weaknesses.

MARINUS DE DESSAND, Letter to Voltaire.

Women have no wilderness in them, They are provident instead, Content in the tight hot cell of their hearts To eat dusty bread.

LOUISE BAKER, Women.

Most illogical

Irrational nature of our womanhood, That blunders one way, seeks another way, And prays, perhaps, something!

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. II, l. 424.

We're all so,—made so—'tis our woman's trade To suffer torment for another's ease.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh. Bk. VII, l. 223.

The souls of women are so small, That some believe they've none at all; Or if they have, like cripples, still They've but one faculty, the will.

SAMUEL BUTLER, Miscellaneous Thoughts, l. 386.

Women have no souls, this saying is not new.

LEWIS WAGER, Repentance of Marie Magdalene. (1566)

Woman is made of glass. (Es de vidrio la mujer.)

Women of kind desire liberty, And not to be constrained as in a thrall.

CHAUCEY, The Frankelays Tale, l. 40.

There are only three things in the world that women do not understand: and they are Liberty, Equality and Fraternity.

G. K. CHESTERTON, On Women.

O silly woman, full of innocence, Full of pity, of truth, and conscience, What maketh you to men to trusten so?

CHAUCEY, Legend of Good Women: Dido, l. 331.

Women do not look so closely. They are easily caught by a birdlime of words.

ALFRED DAVENY, The Creed of Love.

A woman, no less than the populace, a grave judge or a chosen senate, will surrender, defeated, to eloquence. (Quam populus iudexque gravis lectusque senatus, Tam dabit eloquio victa puella manus.)

OVID, Art Amatoris. Bk. I, l. 461.

Nor was it hard to move the lady's mind; When fortune favours, still the fair are kind.

POPE, January and May, l. 303.

With the easy credulity of women. (Facili feminarum credulitate.)

TACITUS, Annales. Bk. XIV, sec. 4.

What cannot a neat knave with a smooth tale Make a woman believe?

A woman who is confused is never convinced. CHURTON COLLINS, Aphorisms.

Women have always some mental reservation. (Les femmes ont toujours quelque arrière-pensée.)

DESTOUCHES, Le Disputateur. Act V, sc. 9.

You are a woman, you must never speak what you think; your words must contradict your thoughts, but your actions may contradict your words.

CONQUEST, Love for Love. Act II, sc. 11.

She's all will and no talking. . . . A, the lady is angry without a cause, and pleased without reason.

FARQUHAR, Sir Harry Wildair. Act i, sc. 1.

She will play with reason and discourse,
And well she can persuade.

SHAKESPEARE, Measure for Measure. Act i, sc. 2, l. 190.

1
Glory and empire are to female blood
More tempting dangerous rivals than a god.

JOHN CROWNE, The Destruction of Jerusalem. Pt. i, act iii, sc. 2.

2
What soft, cherubic creatures
These gentlewomen are!

One would as soon assault a plush
Or violate a star.
Such dimity convictions.

EMILY DICKINSON, Poems. Pt. i, No. 130.

3
Women are not compris'd in our laws of friendship; they are fierce nature.

DRYDEN, The Mock Astrologer. Act iv. Feme nature, the legal term for animals living in a wild state.

4
A woman's hopes are woven of sunbeams; a shadow annihilates them.

GEORGE ELIOT, Felix Holt. Ch. 1.

5
You will find many excuses, for you are a woman. (Πολλὰς ἂν εἴποις μηχανὰς γυνὴ γὰρ εἰ.)
EURIPIDES, Andromache, l. 85.

What could a woman's head contrive
Which it would not know how to excuse?
(Was hätt ein Weiberkopf erdacht, das er Nicht zu bescheuen wüsste?)

LESSING, Nathan der Weise. Pt. iii.

Women are never without an excuse.
GEORGE PETTIE, Pallace, ii, 157. (1576)

6
'Tis woman's nature to bear her ills on lip
and tongue with mournful pleasure.
EURIPIDES, Andromache, l. 94.

Those women who grieve least make the most lamentation. (Jactantius moerent, quæ minus dolent.)

TACITUS, Annales. Bk. ii, sec. 77.

But woman's grief is like a summer storm,
Short as it violent is.

JOANNA BAILEY, Basili. Act v, sc. 3.

7
Pride is the life of a woman, and flattery is our daily bread.

FARQUHAR, The Beaux' Stratagem. Act iv, sc. 2.

What woman can resist the force of praise?
JOHN GAY, Trivia. Bk. i, l. 260.

9
Women forgive injuries, but never forget slights.

T. C. HALIBURTON (SAM SLICK), *The Old
Judge*. Ch. 15.

10
No fault in woman to make show
Of largeness, when they're nothing so;
When true it is, the outside swells
With inward buckram, little else.

ROBERT HERRICK, No Fault in Women.

11
Nothing agreeth worse
Than a lady's heart and a beggar's purse.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 10.

12
A woman dares all things when she loves or hates. (Audax est ad omnia, quæ amat vel odit, femina.)

ST. JEROME, Epistles: Valerius to Rufinus.
Considered spurious.

When greater perils men environ,
Then women show a front of iron;
And, gentle in their manner, they
Do bold things in a quiet way.

THOMAS DUNN ENGLISH, Betty Zane.

When danger comes in an honorable way, a woman's heart grows chill with fear; but if she is doing a bold bad thing her courage never fails.

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 94.

What wilt not woman, gentle woman, dare
When strong affection stirs her spirit up?

ROBERT SOUTHEY, Madoc. Pt. ii, canto 2, l. 175.

13
Women commonly eat more sparingly, and are less curious in their choice of meat; but if once you find a woman gluttonous, expect from her very little virtue.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Letters. Vol. ii, p. 323.

14
She knifed me one night 'cause I wished she was white,

And I learned about women from 'er!
RUDYARD KIPPLING, The Ladies.

15
There is a false modesty which is vanity;
a false glory which is levity; a false grandeur which is meanness; a false virtue which is hypocrisy; and a false wisdom which is prud-ery.

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères: Des Femmes.

16
As soon as a woman begins to be ashamed of what she ought not, she will not be ashamed of what she should. (Næ simul pudere quod non oportet ceperit; quod oportet non pudebit.)

LIVE, Annals. Bk. xxiv, sec. 4.

The life of woman is full of woe,
Toiling on and on and on,
With breaking heart, and tearful eyes,
And silent lips, and in the soul
The secret longings that arise,
Which this world never satisfies!
Some more, some less, but of the whole
Not one quite happy, no, not one!

LONGFELLOW, The Golden Legend. Pt. II.

All women are ambitious naturally.

MARLOWE, Hero and Leander. Stanza i, l. 428.

Feminine policy has a mysterious method;
it is better to leave it to them. (La police feminine a un train mysterieux; il faut le leur quitter.)

As is the body, so is the soul of tender women frail (Ut corpus, teneris ita mens infirma puellis.)

OVIN, Heroides. Epis. xix, l. 7.

Regret is a woman's natural food—she thrives upon it.

A. W. PINERO, Sweet Lavender. Act III.

Woman indeed was born of delay itself.
(Mulier profecto nata est ex ipsa mora.)

PLAUTUS, Miles Gloriosus, l. 1292. (Act iv,
sc. 7.)

Women have many faults, but the worst of them all is that they are too pleased with themselves and take too little pains to please the men.
(Multa mulierum sunt vitia, sed hoc e multis tactum est, Quam sibi nimis placeant minusque sunt operam, uti placeant viris.)

PLAUTUS, Pseudolus, l. 1203. (Act v, sc. 4.)

Nothing so true as what you once let fall:
Most women have no characters at all,
Matter too soft a lasting mark to bear.

And best distinguish'd by black, brown, or fair

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. ii, l. 1.

In men, we various ruling passions find;
In women two almost divide the kind;
Those only fix'd, they first or last obey,
The love of pleasure, and the love of sway.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. ii, l. 207.

Pleasures the sex, as children birds, pursue,
Still out of reach, yet never out of view.

POPE, Moral Essays. Epis. ii, l. 231.

Heav'n gave to woman the peculiar grace
To spin, to weep, and cull human race.

POPE, The Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 160.

A woman who meditates alone meditates evil.
(Mulier cum sola cogitat, male cogitat.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententiae. No. 369.

Such Polly, are your sex—part truth, part fiction;
Some thought, much whim, and all a contradiction.

RICHARD SAVAGE, To a Young Lady.

If ladies be but young and fair,
They have the gift to know it.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 7,
l. 37.

'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud; . . .

'Tis virtue that doth make them most admir'd; . . .

'Tis government that makes them seem divine.
SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act i, sc. 4, l. 128.

There was never yet fair woman but she made mouths in a glass.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 35.

Complacencies of the peignoir, and late
Coffee and oranges in a sunny chair.

WALLACE STEVENS, Sunday Morning.

A woman moved is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty;
And while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip or touch one drop of it.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act
v, sc. 2, l. 142.

Why are our bodies soft and weak and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions and our hearts
Should well agree with our external parts?

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act
v, sc. 2, l. 165.

For women are as roses, whose fair flower
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act ii, sc. 4,
l. 39.

In the beginning, said a Persian poet—Allah took a rose, a lily, a dove, a serpent, a little honey, a Dead Sea apple, and a handful of clay. When he looked at the amalgam—it was a woman.

WILLIAM SHAW, (Portfolio), July, 1894, p. 6.)

1 No woman will deny herself the romantic luxury of self-sacrifice and forgiveness when they take the form of doing something agreeable.

BERNARD SHAW, Fanny's First Play. Act iii.

2 For a woman glory can only be a splendid mourning for lost happiness. (La gloire ne saurait être pour une femme qu'un deuil éclatant du bonheur.)

And wiser when she wishes.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Marian. St. 1.

15 A witty woman is a treasure; a witty beauty is a power.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Diana of the Crossways.

I know a thing that 's most uncommon;

(Envy, be silent and attend!)

I know a reasonable woman,

Handsome and witty, yet a friend.

POPE, On a Certain Lady at Court.

Make the door upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 162.

16 A learned woman is not of much account in the world. A clever woman rules as much of it as lies in her neighbourhood—that is to say, as much as she cares to rule.

H. S. MERRIMAN, The Sowers. Ch. 7.

17 I'd as lief your little head

Should be cumbered up with lead

As with leaping, live or dead,
Or with brains.

ROBERT MONCKTON MILNES, To Doris.

1 If a young lady has that discretion and modesty, without which all knowledge is little worth, she will never make an ostentatious parade of it, because she will rather be intent on acquiring more, than on displaying what she has.

HANNAH MORE, Thoughts on Conversation.

2 So I wonder a woman, the Mistress of Hearts,
Should descend to aspire to be Master of Arts;
A Ministering Angel in woman we see,
And an angel need covet no other Degree.

CHARLES NEAVE, O Why Should a Woman Not Get a Degree?

3 Be to her virtues very kind;
Be to her faults a little blind;
Let all her ways be unconfined;
And clap your padlock—on her mind.

TENNYSON, The Princess. Pt. I, l. 185.

For she was crammed with theories out of books.
TENNYSON, The Princess: Conclusion, l. 35.

13 In the East, women religiously conceal that they have faces; in the West, that they have legs. In both cases they make it evident that they have but little brains.

H. D. THOREAU, Journal, 31 Jan., 1852.

14 Very learned women are to be found, in the same manner as female warriors; but they are seldom or never inventors.

VOLTAIRE, Philosophical Dictionary: Women.

We issued gorged with knowledge, and I spoke:
"Why, sirs, they do all this as well as we"
"They hunt old trails," said Cynl, "very well;
But when did woman ever yet invent?"

TENNYSON, The Princess. Pt. II, l. 366.

15 There is nothing in the whole world so unbecoming to a woman as a nonconformist conscience.

OSCAR WILDE, Lady Windermere's Fan. Act II.

16 Ladies supreme among amusements reign;
By nature born to soothe, and entertain.
Their prudence in a share of folly lies:
Why will they be so weak, as to be wise?

X—WOMAN: Her Power

17 Let men say what'er they will
Woman, woman, rules them still.
THOMAS RICKERSTAFFE, The Soldier. Act II, sc. 1.

As Father Adam first was fool'd,
A case that's still too common,
Here lies a man a woman rul'd.

The Devil ruled the woman.

ROBERT BURNS, Epitaph on a Hen-Pecked Country Squire.

Disguise our bondage as we will,
Tis woman, woman rules us still.

THOMAS MOORE, Sovereign Woman.

Beshrew my heart, but it is wond'rous strange;
Sure there is something more than witchcraft in them,

That masters ev'n the wisest of us all.

NICHOLAS ROWE, Jane Shore. Act iv, sc. 1.

Why, this it is, when men are ruled by women.
SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act i, sc. 1, l. 62.

What all your sex desire is Sovereignty.
DRYDEN, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 279.

Our sex still strikes an awe upon the brave,
And only cowards dare affront a woman.

FARQUHAR, The Constant Couple. Act v, sc. 1.

A noble man is led far by woman's gentle words.
(Ein edler Mann wird durch ein gutes Wort Der Frauen weit geführt.)

GOETHE, Iphigenia auf Tauris. Act i, sc. 2, l. 162.

God in his harmony has equal ends
For cedar that resists and reed that bends;
For good it is a woman sometimes rules.

VICTOR HUGO, Evradune. Pt. v.

Nature has given women so much power that
The law has very wisely given them little.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Letters. Vol. i, p. 104.

For them the Ceylon diver held his breath,
And went all naked to the hungry shark;
For them his ears gush'd blood; for them in death,
The seal on the cold ice with piteous bark

Lay full of darts; for them alone did see the
A thousand men in troubles wide and dark.
KEATS, Isabella. St. 15.

Never any good came out of female domination.
God created Adam master and lord of living creatures, but Eve spoiled all.

MARTIN LUTHER, Table-Talk. No. 727.

Better the devil's than a woman's slave.

MASSINGER, Parliament of Love. Act ii, sc. 2.

She can flourish staff or pen,
And deal a wound that lingers;
She can talk the talk of men,
And touch with thrilling fingers.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Marian. St. 1.

My only books Were woman's looks,
And folly's all they've taught me.

THOMAS MOORE, The Time I've Lost in Wooing.

The virtue of her lively looks

Excels the precious stone;

I wish to have none other books

To read or look upon.

UNKNOWN. (Songs and Sonnets. 1557.)

When loving woman wants her way,
God hesitates to say her nay.

ARTHUR WILLIAM RYDER, When Woman Wills.

They would have all men bound and thrall
To them, and they for to be free.

ALEXANDER SCOTT, Of Womankind.

Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;
Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
The tiger will be mild while she doth mourn;
And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
To hear and see her plaints.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act iii, sc. 1, l. 37.

He will not manage her, although he mount her.

SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis, l. 598.

Woman reduces us all to the common denominator.

BERNARD SHAW, Great Catherine. Sc. 1.

"One moral's plain," cried I, "without more fuss;

Man's social happiness all rests on us:

Through all the drama—whether damn'd or not—

Love gilds the scene, and women guide the plot."

SHEPHERD, The Rhinoceros: Epilogue.

It is said of the horses in the vision, that
"their power was in their mouths and in their tails." What is said of horses in the vision, in reality may be said of women.

SWIFT, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

¹ Let our weakness be what it will, mankind will still be weaker; and whilst there is a world, 'tis woman that will govern it.

VANBRUGH, The Provok'd Wife, Act iii, sc. 3.

Ladies whose smile embroiled the world.

WILLIAM WATSON, Father of the Forest, I, 5.

² The history of women is the history of the worst form of tyranny the world has ever known. The tyranny of the weak over the strong. It is the only tyranny that lasts.

OSCAR WILDE, Woman of No Importance, III.

XI—Woman: Her Advice

³ Woman's counsel is either too dear or too cheap. (Consilium femine nimis carum aut nimis vile.)

ALBERTANO OF BRUSCIA, Libri Consolationis. Cited as a common saying.

The counselling of women is either too dear, or else too little of price.

CHAUCER, Tale of Melibee, Sec. 15, l. 2285.

⁴ Ah! gentle dames, it gars me greet,
To think how monie counselg are sweet,
How monie lengthen'd, sage advices,
The husband frae the wife despises!

BURNS, Tam o' Shanter, l. 33.

⁵ The best counsel is that of woman. (El primer consejo Ha de ser de la muger.)

CALDERON, El Médico de su Honra, Act I, sc. 2.

⁶ She generally gave herself very good advice (though she very seldom followed it).

CARROLL, Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, I.

⁷ A woman's advice has little value, but he who won't take it is a fool.

CELVANTES, Don Quixote, Pt. II, ch. 7.

⁸ Let no man value at a little price
A virtuous woman's counsel; her wing'd spirit
Is feather'd oftentimes with heavenly words.

CHAFFMAN, The Gentleman Usher, Act IV, sc. 1.

⁹ Woman been wise in short avyement.

CHAUCER, Troilus and Criseyde, Bk. IV, l. 936.

¹⁰ For women, with a mischief to their kind,
Pervert, with bad advice, our better mind.

DAYTON, The Cock and the Fox, l. 555.

A woman's counsel brought us first to woe,
And made her man his paradise forego,
Where at heart's ease he liv'd; and might have been

As free from sorrow as he was from sin.

DAYTON, The Cock and the Fox, l. 557.

¹¹ Take the first advice of a woman and not the second. (Primo deinde mulieris consilio, secundo non.)

GRACIUS NOXAMANDUS, (Gracius, Adagia, p. 139.)

Take the first advice of a woman, and not the second. (Prends le premier conseil d'une femme, et non le second), for in processes of reasoning, out of which the second counsels spring, women may and will be inferior to us.

RICHARD CHEEVERIX TRENCH, Proverbs and Their Lessons, IV, 89.

¹² Would men but follow what the sex advise,
All things would prosper, all the world grow wise.

POPE, January and May, l. 67.

¹³ Women beat men in evil counsel. (Malo in consilio femine vincunt viros.)

PUBLILIUS SYRUS, Sententie, No. 358.

¹⁴ Woman's counsel is fatal counsel.

UNKNOWN, Proverbs of Alfred, l. 375 (c. 1250)

Woman's counsel is full often fatal.

CHAUCER, Nonne Preestes Tale, l. 436.

Yet a woman's advice helps at the last.

UNKNOWN, (Towneley Plays, No. xiii, 342, 1388.)

XII—Woman: Her Falseness

¹⁵ More false than fair.

ARIOSTO, Orlando Furioso, Canto vi, st. 14.

Unchaste and false as ever water went.

ARIOSTO, Orlando Furioso, xvi, 14. (Harington, tr.)

She was false as water.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello, v, 2, 134. (1604)

As false as fair.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs, Pt. II, ch. 9. (1546)

As false as hell.

As false as the devil.

JOHN CLARKE, Paræmiologia, 139. (1639)

¹⁶ Woman's love is writ in water!

Woman's faith is traced on sand!

W. E. AYTON, Charles Edward at Versailles, l. 201.

This record will for ever stand,

"Woman, thy vows are traced in sand."

BYRON, To Woman, l. 21.

Woman's faith, and woman's trust—

Write the characters in dust.

SCOTT, The Betrothed, Ch. 20.

¹⁷ But when I trust a wild fool, and a woman,
May I lend gratis, and build hospitals.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Scornful Lady, III.

Trust a woman?

I'll trust the devil first; for he dare be Better than 'a word sometime.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Chances, Act II, sc. 1.

A woman's oaths are wafers, break with making.

JOHN FLETCHER, The Chances, Act II, sc. 1.

¹⁸ Believe a woman or an epitaph,

Or any other thing that's false.

BYRON, English Bards and Scotch Reviewers, l. 78.

1 Women I know are dressed in rags,
Women I know in lace,
And one in a dusky robe of gold
With a hooded cloak of mace;
But every robe and every rag
Is a secret hiding place.

ESTHER LILIAN DUFF, Not Three—But One.

2 A woman-friend! He that believes that weakness

Steers in a stormy night without a compass.

JOHN FLETCHER, Women Pleased. Act ii, sc. 1.

Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,

Trusts a frail bark, with a tempestuous wind.

GEORGE GRANVILLE, The British Enchanters.
Act ii, sc. 1.

Who trusts himself to women, or to waves,
Should never hazard what he fears to lose.

JOHN OLDMIXON, Governor of Cyprus.

3 Her promise of friendship for any avail
Is as sure to hold as an eel by the tail.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. i, ch. 10.

He that hath a woman hath an eel by the tail.
BRAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Scornful Lady.
Act ii, sc. 1.

A woman and a wet eel both have slippery tails.

JAMES SHIRLEY, Arcadia. Act v, sc. 1.

4 As false
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,

As false as Cressid.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida. Act iii,
sc. 2, l. 198.

5 Women have tongues of craft, and hearts of guile,
They will, they will not; fools that on them
trust;

For in their speech is death, hell in their smile.

(Femina è cosa garrula e fallace:
Vuole e disvuole, è folle uom chi sen fida,
Sì tra sé volge.)

TASSO, Jerusalem Delivered. Canto xix, st. 84.

6 Commit thy ship unto the wind,
But not to faith of womankind;

For there's more credit in a wave
Than any faith that women have.

✓ UNKNOWN, Woman's Unfaith. (c. 1593)

7 False, but, however false, beloved still. (Perfida, sed, quamvis perfida, cara tamen.)

8 Thy favours are but like the wind,
That kisseth everything it meets.

SIR ROBERT ARTON, I Do Confess.

Thy favours are the silly wind,
That kisses ilka thing it meets.

BURNS, I Do Confess Thow Art Sae Fae. A paraphrase of Ayton.

9 She's as inconstant as the seas and winds,
Which ne'er are calm but to betray adventurers.

APHERA BEHE, The Forced Marriage. Act i, sc. 1.

10 Their tricks an' craft hae put me daft,
They've ta'en me in, and a' that;

But clear your decks, an' Here's the sex!
I like the jads for a' that.

BURNS, The Jolly Beggars. Air vii.

An' farewell, dear, deluding Woman,
The joy of joys!

BURNS, Epistle to James Smith. St. 14.

O thou delicious, damned, dear, destructive
woman!

CONGREVE, The Old Batchelor. Act iii, sc. 2.

11 The fault was Nature's fault, not thine,
Which made thee fickle as thou art.

BYRON, To a Youthful Friend, l. 15.

12 And every century
Spawn divers queens who die with Antony
But live a great while first with Julius.

JAMES BRANCH CABELL, Retractions.

13 Lo, which sleights and subtleties
In women been!

CHAUCKER, The Merchant's Tale: Epilogue, l. 3.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.

SHAKESPEARE (?), The Passionate Pilgrim, l. 335.

14 Dust is lighter than a feather,
And the wind more light than either:
But a woman's fickle mind
More than feather, dust, or wind.

(Quid pluma levius?—Pulvis. Quid pulvere?

Ventus.

Quid vento? Mulier. Quid muliere? Nihil.)

WALTER DAVISON, Postical Rhapsody. (1602)

Davison quotes the Latin as Incerti Auctoris.

What is lighter than the wind? a feather.
What is lighter than a feather? fire.

What lighter than fire? a woman.

What lighter than a woman? Nothing.
(Vente quid levius? fulgur. Quid fulgur? flamma.

Flamma quid? mulier. Quid mulier? nihil.)

UNKNOWN, (Harlequin M.S. No. 47, No. 3363.)

Pray, what is lighter than a feather?

Dust, my friend, in summer weather.
What's lighter than the dust, I pray?
The wind that blows them both away.
What is lighter than the wind?
The lightness of a woman's mind.
And what is lighter than the last?
Ah, now, my friend, you have me fast!
UNKNOWN. (Notes and Queries, 11 Aug. 1866)

A woman often is but a feather in the wind.
(Une femme souvent N'est qu'une plume au vent.)

VICTOR HUGO, Le Roi S'Amuse. Act iv, sc. 2. (1832)

Woman is as fickle as a feather in the wind.
(La donna è mobile Qual piuma al vento.)

F. M. PIAVE. (Verdi, Rigoletto.) Piave wrote the libretto. (1851)

1
Woman often changes; foolish the man who trusts her. (Souvent femme varie; Bien fol est qui s'y fie.)

FRANÇOIS I OF FRANCE. Written by him with his ring on a window of the château of Chambord. Sometimes quoted, "Tout femme varie." (THEOPHILUS, Essai sur Divers Arts; BRANTÔME, Œuvres, vii, 395.)

2
He ploughs in sand, and sows against the wind,
That hopes for constant love of woman kind.

THOMAS FULLER, Medicine Gymnastica. Vol. x, p. 7.

He ploughs the waves, and sows the sand,
And seeks to gather the wind in a net,
Whose hopes on the heart of a woman are set.
(Ne l'onde saka, e he farena amaina,
E'l vago vento spera in rete accogliere
Chi sue speranze fonda in cor di femina.)

JACOPO SANNARARO, Eclisse Ottava.

He waters, plows, and soweth in the sand,
And hopes the sick'ning wind with net to hold,
Who hath his hopes laid upon woman's hand.
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Arcadia. Bk. II.

Whimsy, not reason, is the female guide.

GEORGE GRANVILLE, The Vision, I. 81.

Women, giddy women!

In her the blisful of your sex you prove,
There is no reason for your hate or love.

MASINGER, A Very Woman. Act v, sc. 2.

4
What is there in this vile earth that more commendeth a woman than constancy?

JAMES LYLY, Endymion and His England.

There is no accounting for the actions of a woman.

MARSHALL, 1. O'Malley, Napoleon in Exile.

How ready is the eye of one woman to view,
And how unlike each other, all how true!
Arcadia's countess here, in crinoid robes,
Is there, Paphia, by a fountain side,
Here Paphia, looking on her own good side,

And there a naked Leda with a swan. . .
Whether the charmer sinner fit, or saint it,
If folly grow romantic, I must paint it.
Come then, the colours and the ground prepare;

Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
Choose a firm cloud before it fall, and in it
Catch, ere she change, the Cynthia of this minute.

POPE, Moral Essays. Ep. ii, l. 5.

Papilla, wedded to her am'rous spark,
Sighs for the shades—"How charming is a park!"

A park is purchased, but the Fair he sees
All bathed in tears—"Oh, odious, odious trees!"

POPE, Moral Essays. Ep. ii, l. 37.

Ladies, like variegated tulips show;
'Tis to their changes half their charms they owe;
Fine by defect, and delicately weak,
Their happy spots the nice admirer take.

POPE, Moral Essays. Ep. ii, l. 41.

She went from Op'ra, Park, Assembly, Play,
To morning walks, and prayers three hours a
day;

To part her time 'twixt reading and Bohem,
To muse, and spill her solitary tea;
Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon.

POPE, Epistle to Mrs. Teresa Blount on Leaving Town, l. 13

To give the sex their due,

They scarcely are to their own wishes true;
They love, they hate, and yet they know not why;

"Constant in nothing but inconstancy"

POPE. Quoting Richard Barnfield. See under FORTUNE.

7
No, no, I'll love no more; let him who can
Fancy the maid who fancies every man;
In some lone place I'll find a gloomy cave,
There my own hands shall dig a spacious grave:

Then all unseen I'll lay me down and die
Since woman's constancy is—all my eye.

WILLIAM BARNES RHODES, Bombastes Furioso.

8
The vows of women
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Than they are to their virtues; which is nothing.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act II, sc. 4, l. 110.

They are not constant, but are changing still.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act II, sc. 5, l. 30.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act I, sc. 3, l. 404.

The fickleness of the woman I love is only equalled by the infernal constancy of the women who love me.

BERNARD SHAW, The Philanderer. Act II.

Yet do not say folly reproves;

She was fair—and my passion begun;

She smiled—and I could not but love;

She is faithless—and I am undone.

WILLIAM SHENSTONE, Pastoral Ballad. Pt. iv.

I know the nature of women: they won't when you would; when you won't, they long for it all the more. (Novi ingenium mulierum: Nolunt ubi velis, ubi nolis cupiunt ultro.)

TERENCE, Eunuchus, I 812. (Act iv, sc. 7.)

When I say that I know women, I mean I know that I don't know them. Every single woman I ever knew is a puzzle to me, as, I have no doubt, she is to herself.

THACKERAY, Mr. Brown's Letters.

A fickle and changeful thing is woman ever. (Varium et mutabile semper Femina.)

VERGIL, Æneid. Bk. iv, l. 569.

My lord, you know what Virgil sings—Woman is various and most mutable.

TENNYSON, Queen Mary. Act III, sc. 6, l. 77.

Shall I, wasting in despair,

Die because a woman's fair?

Or make pale my cheeks with care

'Cause another's rosy are?

Be she fairer than the day,

Or the flow'ry meads in May,

If she think not well of me,

What care I how fair she be?

GEORGE WITHER, The Lover's Resolution.

Be she meeker, kinder, than

Turtle-dove or pelican,

If she be not so to me,

What care I how kind she be?

GEORGE WITHER, The Lover's Resolution.

If she undervalue me,

What care I how fair she be?

SIR WALTER RALEIGH [?], His Further Resolution.

O faithless world, and thy most faithless part,
A woman's heart!

The true shop of variety, where sits

Nothing but fits

And fivers of desire, and pangs of love,

Which toys remove.

Sir HENRY WOTTON, The World.

Why should I sing of woman

And the softness of night,

When the dawn is loud with battle

And the day's teeth bide,

And there's a sword to lay my hand to

And a man's fight?

W. H. WHEAT, Song Against Women.

XIV—Woman: Her Tongue

8a

Ten measures of speech descended on the world; women took nine and men one.

Babylonian Talmud: Kiddushin, fo. 49b.

9

As men

Do walk a mile, women should talk an hour,

After supper: 'tis their exercise.

BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER, Philaster. Act II, sc. 4.

The pleasure of talking is the inextinguishable passion of a woman, coeval with the act of breathing.

LE SAGE, Gil Blas. Bk. vii, ch. 7.

10

I have but one simile, and that's a blunder,

For wordless woman, which is silent thunder.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto vi, st. 57.

11

I am a woman, needs must I speak.

CHAUCER, The Marchantes Tale, l. 1061.

Do you not know I am a woman? when I think, I must speak.

15

Thus through a woman was the secret known;

Tell us, and in effect you tell the town.

DRYDEN, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 201.

A free-tongued woman,

And very excellent at telling secrets.

MIDDLETON AND MASSINGER, The Old Law. Act IV, sc. 2.

How hard it is for women to keep counsel!

SHAKESPEARE, Julius Cæsar. Act II, sc. 4, l. 5.

16

Half the sorrows of women would be averted

If they could repress the speech they know to be useless—nay, the speech they have resolved not to utter.

GEORGE ELIOT, Felix Holt. Ch. 2.

I am very fond of the company of ladies. I like their beauty, I like their delicacy, I like their vivacity, and I like their silence.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (SEWARD, Johnsoniana, 617.)

Silence in woman is like speech in man, Deny't who can.

BEN JONSON, Epicure. Act II, sc. 2.

Such a clatter of words pours from her tongue that you would think all the pots and bells were being clashed together. (Verborum tanta cadit vis, Tot pariter pelves ac tintinnabula dicas Pulsari.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 440.

I know that we women are all justly accounted chatterboxes; and then there is that old proverb, "Never now, nor in any age, such a wonder as a dumb woman." (Nam multum loquaces merito omnes habemur, Nec mutam profecto repertam ullum esse Aut hodie dicunt mulierem aut ullo in seculo.)

PLAUTUS, Aululario, l. 124. (Act II, sc. 1.)

High flights she had, and wit at will; And so her tongue lay seldom still: For in all visits who but she To argue, or to repartee?

MATTHEW PRIOR, Rasselas, l. 5.

It is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top than with a brawling woman in a wide house.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxi, 9.

One tongue is enough for a woman.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs, 59. This proverb is sometimes ascribed to John Milton, because he used it when asked if he intended to teach his daughters Greek and Latin.

You wished me to a wife, fair, rich and young, That had the Latin, French and Spanish tongue. I thank't, and told you I desired none such, And said, One language may be tongue too much.

Then love I not the learned? yes, as my life; A learned mistress, not a learned wife.

SIR JOHN HARRINGTON, Of Women Learned in the Tongues. (Epigrams. Bk. iv, epig. 161.)

And the lady shall say her mind freely, or the blank verse shall bait for't.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act II, sc. 2, l. 338.

Think you a little who can daunt mine ears? Have I not seen my times heard lions roar? Have I not heard the sea puff'd up with winds? Have I not seen an angry bear charged with sweat? Have I not heard great cannon in the field, And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud drums, rattling, and trampets?

And do you tell me of a woman's tongue, That gives not half so great a blow to hear As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire?

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act I, sc. 2, l. 200.

I will board her, though she chide as loud As thunder when the clouds in autumn crack.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act I, sc. 2, l. 95.

Say that she rail; why then I'll tell her plain She sings as sweetly as a nightingale:

Say that she frown; I'll say she looks as clear As morning roses newly wash'd with dew:

Say she be mute and will not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say she uttereth piercing eloquence.

SHAKESPEARE, The Taming of the Shrew. Act II, sc. 1, l. 171.

To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona. Act III, sc. 1, l. 338.

Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet Could rule them both without ten women's wit.

XV—Woman: Her Untruthfulness

Now what I love in women is, they won't Or can't do otherwise than lie, but do it So well, the very truth seems falsehood to it.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto xi, st. 36.

For half so boldly can there no man Swear and lye as a woman can.

CHAUCER, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 227.

For never was it given to mortal man To lie so boldly as we women can.

POPE, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 62.

Deceit, weeping, spinning, God hath give To women kindly, while they may live.

CHAUCER, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 401. A rendering of a medieval proverb: "Fallere, flere, scire, Deit deus in muliere."

1 Hang art, madam! and trust to nature for dissembling.

✓ 2 CONGREVE, The Old Batchelor. Act iii, sc. 1.

Women never confess; even when they seemingly resign themselves to such a course, they are never sincere. . . . A woman scoffs at evidence. Show her the sun, tell her it is daylight, at once she will close her eyes and say to you, "No, it is night."

EMILE GABORIAU, Monsieur Lecoq. Ch. 10.

When a woman writes her confession she is never further from the truth.

JAMES HUNTER, Pathos of Distance, p. 58.

3 O woman! thou wert fashioned to beguile: So have all sages said, all poets sung.

✓ 4 JEAN INGLOW, The Four Bridges. St. 68.

There's no effrontery like that of a woman caught in the act; her very guilt inspires her with wrath and insolence. (Nihil est audacius illis Deprensas: iram atque animos a crimine sumunt.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 284.

5 Talk to me tenderly, tell me lies; I am a woman and time flies.

✓ 6 VIVIAN YEISER LARAMORE, Talk to Me Tenderly.

Women were liars since the world began.

7 I open an old book, and there I find, That "Women still may love whom they deceive."

GEORGE MEREDITH, Modern Love. St. 14.

O woman, born first to believe us;

Yes, also born first to forget;

Born first to betray and deceive us,

Yet first to repent and regret!

JOAQUIN MILLER, Charity. St. 11.

Wise men

Have err'd, and by bad women been deceiv'd;

And shall again, pretend they ne'er so wise.

MILTON, Samson Agonistes, l. 210.

8 There are three things that are not to be credited, a woman when she weeps, a merchant when he swears, nor a drunkard when he prays.

BARNABE RICH, My Lady's Looking Glass, 34. (1616)

9 A very honest woman, but something given to lie.

SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act v, sc. 2, l. 252.

10 Nothing is so delicate as the reputation of a woman; it is at once the most beautiful and most brittle of all human things.

FANNY BURNBY, Euellus. Letter 39.

11 Cease, ye prudes, your envious railing!

Lovely Burns has charms: confess!

True it is she had ae failing:

Had ae woman ever less?

ROBERT BURNS, Under the Portrait of Miss Burns.

She had all the virtues but one.

GEORGE DU MAURIER, Trilby, p. 51.

12 The woman who is resolved to be respected can make herself so even amidst an army of soldiers. (La mujer que se determina á ser honrada entre un ejército de soldados lo puede ser.)

CERVANTES, La Gitanilla.

13 A man with a bad heart has been sometimes saved by a strong head; but a corrupt woman is lost forever.

May turn uncensured to his way;

Polluted streams again are pure,

And deepest wounds admit a cure;

But woman no redemption knows;

The wounds of honour never close.

EDWARD MOORE, Fables. No. 15.

16 By no art can chastity, once injured, be made whole. (Nulla reparabilis arte Lesa pudicitia est.)

OVID, Heroides. Epis. v, l. 103.

When lovely woman stoops to folly,

And finds too late that men betray,

What charm can soothe her melancholy?

What art can wash her guilt away?

The only art her guilt to cover,

To hide her shame from every eye,

To give repentance to her lover,

And wring his bosom, is—to die.

GOLDSMITH, Song. (Vicar of Wakefield. Ch. 24.)

And one false step entirely damns her fame.

In vain with tears the loss she may deplore,

In vain look back on what she was before;

She sets like stars that fall, to rise no more.

NICHOLAS ROWE, Jane Shore. Act I.

But the sin forgiven by Christ in heaven

By man is curs'd alway!

N. P. WILSON, Unseen Spirits.

17 She made it plain that human passion.

Was order'd by predestination;
That if weak women went astray,
Their stars were more in fault than they.
MATTHEW PRIOR, Hans Carvel, l. 9.

As a jewel of gold in a swine's snout, so is a fair woman which is without discretion.
Old Testament: Proverbs, xl, 22.

Women are not
In their best fortunes strong; but want will perjure
The ne'er touch'd vestal.
SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra. Act III,
sc. 12, l. 29.

Though flattery fall,
Virtues with female virtue must prevail.
JOHN GAY, Trivia Bk. i, l. 279.

Frailty, thy name is woman!
SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act I, sc. 2, l. 146.

O, she is fallen
Into a sea of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again.
SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing Act
iv, sc. 1, l. 141.

Death is the fairest cover for her shame.

Maid's nays are nothing, they are shy,
But to desire what they deny.

ROBERT HERRICK, Maid's Nays Are Nothing.

The lass saith no, and would fain fain:
And this is Love, as I hear saine.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH, What Is Love?

Maid, in modesty, say "No" to that
Which they would have the profferer construe
"Ay."

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act i, sc. 2, l. 55.

To say why gals acts so or so,
Or don't, 'ould be persunnin';
Mebby to mean yes an' say no
Comes natural to women.

J. R. LOWELL, The Courtin'.

Woman's behaviour is a surer bar
Than is their No! That fairly doth deny Without denying. Thereby kept they are Safe even from hope. In part to blame is she
Which hath without consent been only tried.
He comes too near that comes to be denied.

SIR THOMAS OVERBURY, A Wife. St. 36.

While vain coquets affect to be pursued,
And think they're virtuous if not grossly lewd,
Let this great maxim be my virtue's guide:
In part she is to blame that has been try'd—
He comes too near, that comes to be deny'd.

Resolve*.

Make denials Increase your services.
SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act II, sc. 3, l. 53.

Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought?
SHAKESPEARE [?], Passionate Pilgrim, l. 339.

Take no repulse, whatever she doth say;
For, "get you gone," she doth not mean, "away."
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act III, sc. 1, l. 100.

Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act III, sc. 7, l. 51.

No is no negative in a woman's mouth.

To pluck the sting.

EDMOND SPENSER, Philip Van Artevelde. Act I,
sc. 2.

When Venus said "Spell me for me."

"N-O," Dan Cupid wrote with glee,
And smiled at his success:
"Ah, child," said Venus, laughing low,
"We women do not spell it so,
We spell it Y-E-S."

CAROLYN WELLS, The Spelling Lesson.

XVIII—Woman: A Woman's Reason

It is a woman's reason to say I will do such a thing because I will.

JEREMIAH BURROUGHS, On Home Vol. IV. (1652)

A woman's reason—because it is so.

GEORGE FARQUHAR, The Recruiting Officer. Act IV, sc. 3.

Women's reasons; they would not because they would not.

2 Shall I lose

The privilege of my sex, which is my will,
To yield a reason like a man?

MASSINGER, A Very Woman. Act I, sc. 1.

3 Woman's reason is in the milk of her breasts.
GEORGE MERKENTH, Richard Feverel. Ch. 43.

4 If a man should importune me to give a reason why I loved him, I find it could no otherwise be expressed than by making answer, Because it was he; because it was I.
MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. I, ch. 27.

6 He may go forward like a stoic Roman
Where pangs and terrors in his pathway lie—
Or, seizing the swift logic of a woman,
Curse God and die.

E. A. ROBINSON, The Man Against the Sky.

He owns her logic of the heart,
And wisdom of unreason.

WHITTIER, Among the Hills.

6 I have no other but a woman's reason:
I think him so, because I think him so.
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona. Act I, sc. 2, l. 23.

7 You sometimes have to answer a woman according to her womanishness, just as you have to answer a fool according to his folly.
BERNARD SHAW, An Unsocial Socialist. Ch. 18.

XIX—Woman: A Woman's Vengeance

The feat that willingly provokes a woman
Has made himself another evil angel,
And a new hell, to which all other torments
Are but mere pastime.

BEAUCHAMPEL AND FLETCHER, Cupid's Revenge. Act III.

8 Women do most delight in revenge.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Christian Moral. Pt. III, sec. 12.

Sweet is revenge—especially to women.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto I, st. 124.

And their revenge is as the tiger's spring,
Deadly, and quick, and crushing.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto II, st. 199.

No vengeance like a woman's.

GEORGE GRANVILLE, The British Enchanters. Act V, sc. 2.

Not ev'n the soldier's fury, rais'd in war,
The rage of tyrants, when defiance stings 'em!
The pride of priests, so bloody when in power!
Are half so dreadful as a woman's vengeance.

RICHARD SAVAGE, Sir Thomas Overbury.

10 I've seen your stormy seas and stormy women,
And pity lovers rather more than scapen.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto VI, st. 53.

And her brow clear'd, but not her troubled eye;
The wind was down, but still the sea ran high.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto VI, st. 110.

And femininely meaneth furiously,
Because all passions in excess are female.

BYRON, Sardanapalus. Act III, sc. 1.

11 We shall find no fiend in hell can match the fury of a disappointed woman,—scorned, slighted, dismissed without a parting pang.

COLLEY CIBBER, Love's Last Shift. Act IV, sc. 1. (1696)

Heav'n has no rage like love to hatred turn'd,
Nor hell a fury like a woman scorn'd.

WILLIAM CONGREVE, The Mourning Bride. Act III, sc. 8. Concluding lines. (1697)

Is any Panther's, Llioness's rage
So furious, any Torrent's fall so swift.

As a wrong'd woman's hate?

NATHANIEL LEE, The Rival Queens. Act I, sc. 1. (1677)

A alighted woman knows no bounds
VANBRUGH, The Mistake. Pt. I, act II, sc. 1. (1705)

Oh, woman wronged can cherish hate
More deep and dark than manhood may!

WHITTIER, Magg Megone. Pt. I, st. 21.

12 To work a fell revenge a man's a fool,
If not instructed in a woman's school.

JOHN FLETCHER, Spanish Curate. Act V, sc. 1.

13 Revenge, we find,
Ever the pleasure of a petty mind,
And hence so dear to poor weak womankind.

(Quippe minuti

Then, my boy, beware of Daphne. Learn a lesson from the cat:

What is cunning in the kitten may be cruel in the cat.

HENRY UNDERWOOD JOHNSON, Daphne.

Offend her, and she knows not to forgive;
Oblige her, and she'll hate you while you live.

Pope, Moral Essays, Epig. II, l. 137.

I am a woman! nay, a woman wrong'd!
And when our sex from injuries take fire,
Our softness turns to fury—and our thoughts
Breathe vengeance and destruction.

RICHARD SAVAGE, Sir Thomas Overbury.

What an enraged woman can accomplish!
(Quid femina possit.)

Women and elephants never forget an injury.

H. H. MUNRO (SAKI), Reginald on Becetting

Prince, a precept I'd leave for you,
Coin'd in Eden, existing yet:

Skirt the parlor, and shun the zoo—

Women and elephants never forget.

DOROTHY PARKER, Ballade of Unfortunate Mammals.

XX—Woman: A Woman's Will

He is a fool who thinks by force or skill
To turn the current of a woman's will.

CALDERON, Adventures of Five Hours. Act v, sc. 3, l. 483. (Samuel Tuke, tr.)

Where is the man who has the power and skill
To stem the torrent of a woman's will?

For if she will, she will, you may depend on't;
And if she won't, she won't; so there's an end on't.

UNKNOWN, Inscription, on pillar, Dame John Field, Canterbury, Eng. (London Examiner, 31 May, 1829)

She is one of them to whom God bade ho;
She will all have, and will right nought forego.

JOHN HAYWOOD, Proverbs, Pt. I, ch. 11.

First, then, a woman will, or won't,—depend on't;

If she will do't, she will; and there's an end on't.

But, if she won't, since safe and sound your trust is,

Fear is affront: and jealousy injustice.

Women because they cannot have their wills
When they die, they will have their wills while they live.

JOHN MANNINGHAM, Diary, p. 92. (1602)

Men, dying, make their wills, but when

Escape a task so and;

Why should they make what all their lives
The gentle dames have had?

J. G. SAKS, Woman's Will.

Thus it shall befall
Him, who to worth in women overtrusting,
Lest her will rule; restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse.

Many men have many minds,
But women have but two,

Everything would they have,

And nothing would they do.

UNKNOWN, Women's Minds. (Notes and Queries, Ser. III, vol. 8, p. 494.)

XXI—Woman and the Home

The works of women are symbolical.

We sew, sew, prick our fingers, dull our sight,
Producing what? A pair of slippers, sir,
To put on when you're weary.

E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. I, l. 466.

Dusting, darning, drudging, nothing is great or small,

Nothing is mean or irksome, love will hallow it all.

WALTER CHALMERS SMITH, Hilda Among the Broken Gods, Bk. II.

She was so diligent, with-outen sloth,
To serve and pleaseen everich in that place,
That all her loved that looked upon her face.

CHAUCER, Tale of the Man of Lawe, l. 432.

Her natural turn is grave and domestic; and she seems to have been raised by her aunts & la grace, instead of being raised in a hot bed, as most young ladies are of late.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 30 Sept., 1757.

In her very style of looking

There was cognisance of cooking!

From her very dress were peeping

Indications of housekeeping!

ROBERT BUCHANAN, White Rose and Red.

Her best and safest club is the home. . . .
Sensible and responsible women do not want to vote. The relative positions to be assumed by man and woman in the working out of our civilization were assigned long ago by a higher intelligence than ours.

GROVER CLEVELAND, (Ladies' Home Journal, April and October, 1905.)

When housewives all the house forsake,
And leave good men to brew and bake,

With-outen guile, then be it said,

That house doth stand upon its head.

XXIV—Woman and Love

See also Love in Man and Woman

Women wish to be loved without a why or a wherefore; not because they are pretty, or good, or well-bred, or graceful, or intelligent, but because they are themselves.

AMIEL, Journal, 17 March, 1868.

A woman can be anything that the man who loves her would have her be.

J. M. BARRE, Tommy and Grisel, p. 31.

As a man thinketh, so is she

J. M. BARRE, What Every Woman Knows. Act II.

THROUGH THICK AND THIN, see under PROVERBS

A compliment for a woman in love is like a sudden warmth falling around her—it is intoxication—it is like strong wine, one grows drunk with it.

HENRY BROWNE, The Thief. Act II.

A woman . . . always feels herself complimented by love, though it may be from a man incapable of winning her heart, or perhaps even her esteem.

ANNE STREVEN, Life of Madame de Staël. Ch. 3.

The heart of woman tastes no truer joy,
Is never satiated with such dear enchantment—
'Tis more than selfish vanity—as when
She hears the praises of the man she loves.

So loving and so lovely.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto ii, st. 193.

If women could be fair and yet not fond.

EDWARD DE VERA, Woman's Changeableness.

Why did she love him? Curious food!—he still—

Is human love the growth of human will?

BYRON, Lara. Canto ii, st. 22.

There are women whose talent it is to serve.
And some are great lovers.

JOHN DRINKWATER, Mary Stuart.

The hearts of women sicken for love more than the hearts of men, but honor curbs desire.

EURIPIDES, Andromache, l. 220.

Every woman loves more than a man loves, but out of shame she hides the sting of love, although she be mated for it. (Πάντα γυνὴ φιλεῖ πλεον ὅσον ἀνδρῶν ἐν κατὰ ἀνδρῶν ἡρώεσσιν, ἐκαστοῦ καὶ αὐτῆς.)

NONNUS, Dionysius, xlii, 209. (Greek Anthology. Bk. x, epig. 120.)

How a little love and conversation improve a woman!

FAMOUS, The Beggar's Stratagem. Act iv, sc. 2.

A curse attends that woman's love
Who always would be pleasing.

JOHN GALT, The Beggar's Opera. Act 5, sc. 1.

"I love you" is all the secret that many, nay, most women have to tell. When that is said, they are like China-crackers on the morning of the fifth of July

O. W. HOLMES, *The Professor at the Breakfast-
Table*. Ch. 8.

And beaux were turn'd to flambeaux where she came.

THOMAS HOOD, Bianca's Dream, l. 12.

How could I tell I should love thee to-day
Whom that day I held not dear?

How could I know I should love thee away
When I did not love thee near?

JEAN INGLEW, Supper at the Mill.

Never will you find a woman who spares the man who loves her; for though she be herself shame, she delights to torment him.
(Nullum invenies quæ parcat amanti; Ardeat ipsea licet, tormentis gaudet amantia.)

JUVENAL, Satires. Sat. vi, l. 208.

Nowhere in stone, paint, or poem is a lady in my line portrayed as using a lover well (Nam neque fictum usquam neque pictum neque scriptum in poematis Ubi lena bene agat cum

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 174. (Act i, sc. 3.)

The woman that spares her lover spares herself too little (Quæ amanti parcat, eadem sibi parcat parum)

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 177. (Act i, sc. 3.)

Womankind more joy discovers

Making fools, than keeping lovers

JOHN WILMOT, A Dialogue on the Coquetry of Women, l. 71.

Men love us, or they need our love.

JOHN KEBLE, *The Christian Year: 7th Sunday
after Trinity*.

One can find women who have never had one love affair, but it is rare indeed to find any who have had only one. (On peut trouver des femmes qui n'ont jamais eu de galanterie, mais il est rare d'en trouver qui n'en aient jamais eu qu'une.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes No. 73.

Women in love pardon great indiscretions more easily than little infidelities. (Les femmes qui aiment, pardonnent plus aisément les grandes indiscrétions que les petites infidélités.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 429.

A lover without indiscretion is no lover at all.

THOMAS HARDY, Hand of Elizabeth. Ch. 20.

How unhappy the woman who is in love and virtuous at the same time! (Qu'une femme est à plaindre, quand elle a tout ensemble de l'amour et de la vertu!)

7 Whether they give or refuse, it delights women to have been asked. (Quæ dant, quæque negant, gaudent tamen esse rogatæ.)

OVIN, Ars Amatoria. Bk. I, l. 345.

8 Women often wish to give unwillingly what they really like to give. (Quod juvat, invite sepe dedisse volunt.)

OVIN, Ars Amatoria. Bk. I, l. 674.

9 'Tis never for their wisdom that one loves the wisest, or for their wit that one loves the wittiest; 'tis for benevolence and virtue and honest fondness one loves people; the other qualities make one proud of loving them, too.

HESTER LYNN PROZIN, Letter to Fanny Burney, 1781.

✓ 10 Oh! say not Woman's love is bought
With vain and empty treasure!
Oh! say not Woman's heart is caught
By ev'ry idle pleasure!

When first her gentle bosom knows
Love's flame, it wanders never,
Deep in her heart the passion glows;
She loves, and loves for ever!

THOMAS POCCOCK, Song. From a musical entertainment, The Hair of Vixen, produced at Covent Garden, London, 27 Feb., 1817.

Often wrongly ascribed to Thomas Love Peacock.

11 There swims his goose so grey, but soon or late
She finds some honest gander for her mate.

POPE, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 98.

12 This I set down as a positive truth: A woman with fair opportunities and without a positive hump, may marry whom she likes.

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair. Ch. 4.

13 Any woman will love any man that bothers her enough.

HENRY WALLACE PHILLIPS, Mr. Scroggs.

14 How quaint an appetite in woman reigns!

Free gifts we scorn, and love what costs us pains.

Let men avoid us, and on them we leap;
A glutted market makes provision cheap.

POPE, Wife of Bath's Prologue, l. 259.

15 No woman ever hates a man for being in love with her, but many a woman hates a man for being a friend to her.

POPE, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

16 She should be humble, who would please;
And she must suffer, who can love.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Chloe Jealous. St. 5.

17 Let not the creaking of shoes nor the rustling of silks betray thy poor heart to woman.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act III, sc. 4, l. 97.

18 Every woman who hasn't any money is a matrimonial adventurer.

BERNARD SHAW, Heartbreak House. Act II.

19 Vitality in a woman is a blind fury of creation.

BERNARD SHAW, Man and Superman. Act I.

20 They say there are sixty-seven different ways in which a woman can like a man.

ALFRED SUTRO, The Walls of Jericho. Act I.

21 Shepherd, be advised by me,
Cast off grief and willow-tree:
For thy grief brings her content;
She is pleased if thou lament.

UNKNOWN, The Willow Tree. (Old Ballad.)

WONDER

22 Wonder—which is the seed of knowledge.

FRANCIS BACON, Advancement of Learning.

23 Men love to wonder and that is the seed of our science.

EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Works and Days.

24 Wonder is the foundation of all philosophy. (L'admiration est fondement de toute philosophie.)

MONTEAGNE, Essays. Bk. III, ch. 11.

25 Wonder is the feeling of a philosopher, and philosophy begins in wonder.

SOCRATES (PLATO), Theaetetus. Sec. 155.)

26 Has a man done wondering at women?—there follow men, dead and alive, to wonder at. Has he done wondering at men?—there's God to wonder at.

ROBERT BROWNING, Pippa Passes. Pt. I.

27 The man who cannot wonder, who does not habitually wonder (and worship), . . . is but a pair of spectacles, behind which there is no eye.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. i, ch. 10.

1 How great is the wonder of heavenly and earthly things! (Quanta sit admirabilitas coelestium rerum atque terrestrium.)

CICERO, De Natura Deorum. Bk. ii, sec. 36.

2 To wonder at nothing when it happens; to consider nothing impossible before it has come to pass. (Nihil admirari cum acciderit, nihil, ante quam evenierit, non evenire posse arbitrari.)

CICERO, Tusculanarum Disputationum. Bk. iii, ch. 14, sec. 30. Cicero refers to this attitude of mind as the ideal of wisdom.

NIL ADMIRARI, see under ADMIRATION.

And Katterfelto, with his hair on end
At his own wonders, wond'ring for his bread.

COWPER, The Task. Bk. iv, l. 86.

I've made bread from the bump of wonder:
That's my business, and there's my tale.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Juggling Jerry.

4 Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe

And stupid at the wondrous things he saw,
Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law.

DRYDEN, Theodore and Honoria, l. 217.

5 Wonder is the daughter of ignorance.

JOHN FLORIO, First Fruits. Fo. 32. (1578)

"Wonderful!" I ejaculated.

"Common-place," said Holmes.

A. CONAN DOYLE, A Study in Scarlet, p. 16.
(1887) A colloquy in the first Sherlock Holmes tale, and repeated with variations many times in later ones.

6 Wonders will never cease.

DAVID GARRICK, Correspondence. Vol. ii, p. 174.

The world will never starve for want of wonders;
but only for want of wonder.

G. K. CHESTERTON, Tremendous Trifles.

7 On account of that wonderful event, a nine days' solemn feast was celebrated by the Romans. (Romanis quoque ab eodem prodigio novendiale sacrum publice susceptum est.)

LIVY, History. Bk. i, sec. 31.

A wonder last but nine night never in town.
CHAUCER, Troilus. Bk. iv, l. 588. (c. 1374)

This wonder (as wonders last) lasted nine days.
JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 1. (1546)

Edward: You 'ld think it strange if I should marry her. . . .

Gloucester: That would be ten days' wonder at the least.

Clarence: That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 112.

No wonder lasts more than three days. (Nuna meraviglia dura più che tre giorni.)

UNKNOWN. An Italian proverb.

8 Things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

Old Testament: Job, xlii, 3.

There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not: The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xxx, 18, 19.

There be triple ways to take, of the eagle or the snake,

Or the way of a man with a maid.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Long Trail.

There be three things full hard to be known which way they will draw. The first is of a bird sitting upon a bough. The second is of a vessel in the sea. And the third is the way of a young man.

UNKNOWN. (Reliq. Antiquæ, i, 233. 1417)

9 Nay, I'll speak that Which you will wonder at.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well. Act iv, sc. 1, l. 94.

I am to discourse wonders.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream. Act iv, sc. 2, l. 29.

10 O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after that, out of all hooping!

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 201.

O day and night, but this is wondrous strange!

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act i, sc. 5, l. 164.

There is something in this more than natural, if philosophy could find it out.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act ii, sc. 2, l. 385.

Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 110.

11 Whilst I am bound to wonder, I am bound To pity too.

SHAKESPEARE, Cymbeline. Act i, sc. 4, l. 81.

'Twas strange, 'twas passing strange;
'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act i, sc. 3, l. 160.

12 This man so complete

Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act i, sc. 2, l. 118.

13 You shall see wonders.

Wonder and amazement inhabits here.

SHAKESPEARE, The Tempest. Act v, sc. 2, l. 104.

I do not envy, but I rather wonder. (Non aequidem invidio; miror magis.)
VIRGIL, Eclagues. No. 1, l. 11.

There's something in a flying horse,
There's something in a huge balloon;
But through the clouds I'll never float
Until I have a little Boat,
Shaped like the crescent moon.

WORDSWORTH, Peter Bell: Prologue, l. 1.

We nothing know, but what is marvellous;
Yet what is marvellous we can't believe.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night vii, l. 1423.

Nothing can satisfy, but what confounds;
Nothing, but what astonishes, is true.

WOODS

I—Woods: Apothegms

He that fears leaves, let him not go into the wood.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jocula Prudentum.

Ye cannot see the wood for trees.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. II, ch. 4. (1546)

It is foolish to carry timber to the wood.
(In silvam parvum ligna ferat insanitus.)

HORACE, Satires. Bk. I, sat. 10, l. 34.

This is the forest primeval.

LONGFELLOW, Evangeline, l. 1.

In a moment the ashes are made, but a forest is a long time growing. (Momento fit cinis: diu sylva.)

SENECA, Natural Questions Bk. III, sec. 27.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root?

SHAKESPEARE, Macbeth Act IV, sc. 1, l. 95.

Don't boast until you see the enemy dead.
(Magna pars vitæ nunc relictæ est.)

SOPHOCLES, Cædæus, Epistola ad Atticum Bk. IV, epis. 8.)

place, Dearborn, Mich.*

II—Woods: Description

This forest looks the way

Nightingales sound

GRACE HAZARD COWLING, Frost on a Window.

In the midway of this our mortal life,
I found me in a gloomy wood astray,
Gone from the path direct.

(Nel mezzo del cammin di nostra vita
Mi ritrovai per una selva oscura,
Che la diritta via era smarrita.)

DANTE, Inferno. Canto I, l. 1.

As oft as on the earth I've lain
I've died and come to life again
For only men who are brave and good
Can come out changeless from a wood.

MARY CAROLYN DAVIES, Out of the Earth.

At the gates of the forest, the surprised man of the world is forced to leave his city estimates of great and small, wise and foolish.
The knapsack of custom falls off his back

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Nature.

When a lady rallied Adam Smith on his plain dress, he pointed to his well-bound library, and said, "You see, Madame, I am a beau in my books." The farmer in this month [October] is very patient of his coarse attire, and thinks, "at least, I am a beau in my woods."

EMERSON, Journals, October, 1854.

The woods appear
With crimson blotches deeply dashed and crossed,—

Sign of the fatal pestilence of Frost.

BAYARD TAYLOR, Mon-da-Mis. St. 38.

To linger silent among the healthful woods, musing on such things as are worthy of a wise and good man. (Tacitum silvas inter reptare salubres, Curantem quicquid dignum sapiente bonoque est.)

HORACE, Epistles. Bk. I, epia. 4, l. 4.

The perplex'd paths of this drear wood,
The wedding-horror of whose shady bowers
Threats the forlorn and wand'ring passenger.

High overarch'd, and echoing walks between.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. ix, l. 1106.

^{1a} The forests of America, however alighted by man, must have been a great delight to God;
for they were the best he ever planted.

JOHN MUIR, The American Forests. (Atlantic Monthly, vol. lxxx, p. 145.)

² Hath not old custom made this life more sweet Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods

More free from peril than the envious court?

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 1, l. 2.

Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time.

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 7, l. 111.

Unfrequented woods

I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.

⁴ Good is an Orchard, the Saint saith,
To meditate on life and death.

KATHARINE TYNAN, Of an Orchard.

⁵ The woods please us above all things. (Nobis placant ante omnia sylva.)

VERGIL, Eclogues. No. 4, l. 62.

In such green palaces the first kings reign'd;
Slept in their shades, and angels entertain'd;
With such old counsellors they did advise,
And, by frequenting sacred groves, grew wise.

EDMUND WALLER, On St. James' Park, l. 21.

⁶ One impulse from a vernal wood
May teach you more of man,
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can.

WORDSWORTH, The Tables Turned. St. 6.

There is a spirit in the woods.

not worth the winning.

LONGFELLOW, Courtship of Miles Standish. Pt. III.

¹⁷ Archly the maiden smiled, and, with eyes
overrunning with laughter,

Said, in a tremulous voice, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"

LONGFELLOW, The Courtship of Miles Standish.
Pt. II, conclusion.

I wooed the blue-eyed maid,
Yielding, yet half afraid,
And in the forest's shade
Our vows were plighted.

LONGFELLOW, The Skeleton in Armor.

Ere long the time will come, sweet Precious,
When that dull distance shall no more divide us;

And I no more shall scale thy wall by night
To steal a kiss from thee, as I do now.

LONGFELLOW, The Spanish Student Act I, sc. 3.

Her virtue and the conscience of her worth,
That would be woo'd, and not unsought be won.

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. viii, l. 502.

The time I've lost in wooing,
In watching and pursuing
The light that lies
In woman's eyes,

Has been my heart's undoing.

THOMAS MOORE, The Time I've Lost in Wooing.

The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer
the heart of the wooing.

RICHARD REALT, Indirection.

I touch her, like my beads, with devout care,
And come unto my courtship as my prayer.

THOMAS RANDOLPH, A Devout Lover.

It was a happy age when a man might have wooed his wench with a pair of kid leather gloves, a silver thimble, or with a tawdry
lace; but now a velvet gown, a chain of pearl, or a coach with four horses will scarcely serve the turn.

BARNABE RICH, My Lady's Looking Glass.

Afraid he would now, and now, and now, pop
the question; which he had not the courage to put.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON, Sir Charles Grandison, vi, ix, 101.

And frame love ditties passing rare,
And sing them to a lady fair.

SCOTT, Marmion. Canto I, st. 7.

Most fair,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms
Such as will enter at a lady's ear
And plead his love-stuit to her gentle heart?

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act v, sc. 2, l. 98.

I was not born under a shynaking planet, nor I cannot woo to festival terms.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, v, 2, 41.

Now, as I said before, I was never a wooer of phrases.

I can march up to a fortress and summon the place to surrender,
But march up to a woman with such a proposal,
I dare not.

I'm not afraid of bullets, nor shot from the mouth of a cannon,
But of a thundering "No!" point-blank from the mouth of a woman,
That I confess I'm afraid of, nor am I ashamed to confess it!

LONGFELLOW, Courtship of Miles Standish. Pt. II.

She 's beautiful and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman, therefore to be won.

SHAKESPEARE, 1 Henry VI. Act v, sc. 3, l. 78.

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be won

SHAKESPEARE, Titus Andronicus, ii, 1, 82.

Was ever woman in this humour woo'd?

Was ever woman in this humour won?

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act I, sc. 2, l. 228.

For nature framed all women to be won.

TASSO, Jerusalem Delivered. Bk. II, st. 15.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice. Act II,
sc. 8, l. 43.

You have brought her into such a canaries as 'tis wonderful.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.

Act II, sc. 2, l. 61.

If you were men, as you are men in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so;
To vow and swear and superpraise my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.

SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.

Act III, sc. 2, l. 151.

She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd

That heaven had made her such a man: she thank'd me.

And bade me, if I had a friend that loved
her,

I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act I, sc. 3, l. 162.

Gentle thou art and therefore to be won,
Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assailed;
And when a woman woos, what woman's son
Will sourly leave her till she have prevailed?

SHAKESPEARE, Sonnets. No. xli.

Women are angels, wooing:
Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:

That she belov'd knows nought that knows not this:

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, I, 2, 312.

Our kindred, though they be long ere they are wooded, they are constant being won: they are burn, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida. Act III, sc.
2, l. 118.

1
There is a young lady I have set my heart on;
though whether she is a-goin' to give me hern, or give me the miltie, I ain't quite satisfied.

3
I thought to undermine the heart
By whispering in the ear.

SIR JOHN SUCKLING, 'Tis Now, Since I Sat Down Before.

4
'Or sighed and looked unutterable things.

THOMSON, The Seasons: Summer, l. 1188.

II—Wooring: Its Delights

5
All soft and sweet the maid appears,
With looks that know no art,
And though she yields with trembling fears,
She yields with all her heart.

AFERA BEHN, The Emperor of the Moon. Act
III, sc. 3.

6
Much ado there was, God wot!
He would love and she would not.
She said, Never was man true;
He said, None was false to you.
He said, He had lov'd her long;
She said, Love should have no wrong.
Coridon would kiss her then;
She said, Maids must kiss no men
Till they did for good and all.

NICHOLAS BRETTON, Phyllis and Coridon.

But 'neath yon crimson tree,
Lover to listening maid might breathe his flame,
Nor mark, within its roseate canopy,
Her blush of maiden shame.
BRYANT, Autumn Woods.

7
Duncan Gray cam here to woo
(Ha, ha, the wooring o'!)
On blythe Yule-Night when we were fou
(Ha, ha, the wooring o'!)

Maggie coost her head fu' high,
Look'd asklent and unco skeigh,
Gart poor Duncan stand abeigh—
Ha, ha! the wooring o'!

BURNS, Duncan Gray.

He kin o' filtered on the mat,
Some doubtlie o' the seikle,
His heart kep' goin' pity-pat,
But hern went pity Zekle.
LOWELL, The Cowbird. St. 15.

He stood a spell on one foot fust,

Then stood a spell on t'other,
An' on which one he falt the wust
He couldn't ha' told ye nuther.
J. R. LOWELL, The Cowbird. St. 19.

8
With a hey, Dolly! ho, Dolly!
Dolly shall be mine,
Before the spray is white with May,
Or blooms the eglantine.
AUSTIN DOBSON, The Milkmaid.

9
What is the greatest bliss
That the tongue o' man can name?
'Tis to woo a bonnie lassie
When the kye comes hame.
JAMES HOOE, When the Kye Comes Hame.

My Peggy is a young thing,
And I'm na very auld,
Yet weel I like to meet her at
The waiking o' the fauld.
ALLAN RAMSAY, My Peggy.

O ruddier than the cherry!
O sweeter than the berry!
O nymph more bright
Than moonshine night,
Like kiddings, blithe and merry!
Ripe as the melting cluster!
No lily has such lustre;
Yet hard to tame
As raging flame,
And fierce as storms that bluster!

JOHN GAY, Acis and Galatea. Pt. II.

10
I sat with Doris, the Shepherd maiden;
Her crook was laden with wreathed flowers;
I sat and wooed her through sunlight wheel-
ing,
And shadows stealing for hours and hours.
ARTHUR JOSEPH MUNBY, Pastoral.

11
Woored, and married, and a',
Married, and woored, and a',
And was she nae very weel aff
That was woored, and married, and a'?
ALEXANDER ROSS, Woored and Married and A'.

12
A heaven on earth I have won by wooring
thee.

SHAKESPEARE, All's Well that Ends Well. Act
IV, sc. 2, l. 66.

Wooring thee, I found thee of more value
Than stamps in gold or sums in scaled bags;
And 'tis the very riches of thyself
That now I aim at.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Act III, sc. 4, l. 15.

III—Wooring: Advice

13
Woo the fair one when around
Early birds are singing;
When o'er all the fragrant ground
Early herbs are springing:
When the brookside, bank, and grove
All with blossom laden,

Shine with beauty, breathe of love,
Weo the timid maiden.

BYRON, Love's Lessons.

1 She that with poetry is won,
Is but a desk to write upon;
And what men say of her they mean
No more than on the thing they lean.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 1, l. 591.

2 Maidens, like moths, are ever caught by glare,
And Mammon wins his way where seraphs might despair.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto i, st. 9.

The miller, he hecht her a heart leal and loving;
The laird did address her wi' matter mair moving:
A fine pacing-horse, wi' a clear, chained bridle,
A whip by her side, and a bonie addle!

ROBERT BURNS, Meg o' the Mill.

3 He that will win his dame must do
As love does when he draws his bow;
With one hand thrust the lady from,
And with the other pull her home.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. ii, canto 1, l. 449.

4 A man shall win us best with flattery.
CHAUCEER, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 76.

Have you not found out that every woman is infallibly to be gaised by every sort of flattery, and every man by one sort or other?

LOUIS CRESTFIELD, Letters, 16 March, 1752.

The truest purpose of a woman's heart
To well-timed, artful flattery may yield
GEORGE LILLO, Elmerick

5 He behaved as most professed admirers do.
Said some civil things of my face, talked much of his want of merit, and the greatness of mine; mentioned his heart, gave a short tragedy speech, and ended with pretended rapture.

GOLDENSMITH, She Stoops to Conquer. Act v, 1.

6 If doughty deeds my lady please,
Right soon I'll mount my steed;
And strong his arm and fast his seat,
That bears frae me the meed. . . .
Then tell me how to woo thee, Love,
O tell me how to woo thee!
For thy dear sake nae care I'll take,
Tho' ne'er another throw me.

ROBERT CURRIE-GRAHAM, Tell Me How to Woo Thee.

7 But, alas! alas! for the Woman's fate,
Who has froon a mob to choose a mate
'Tis a strange, and painful mystery!
But the more the eyes, the young the hatch;
The more the fish, the more the catch;
The more the sparks, the more the match;

Is a fact in Woman's history.
THOMAS HOOD, Mrs. Hemmings. The Con-ship. St. 7.

8 The surest way to hit a woman's heart is to take aim kneeling.

DONALD JENKINS, The Way to a Woman's Heart.

9 If I speak to thee in friendship's name,
Thou think'st I speak too coldly;
If I mention Love's devoted flame,
Thou say'st I speak too boldly.

THOMAS MOORE, How Shall I Woo?

10 Frivolous minds are won by trifles: many have found useful the deft arranging of a cushion; it has helped, too, to stir the air with a light fan, or to set a stool beneath a dainty foot (Parva leves captant animos.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 159.

Employ soft flatteries, and words which delight the ear. (Blanditis molles, auremque juvantia verba Adfer.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. ii, l. 159.

If you can, truly; if not, at any rate readily. (Si poteris, vere, si minus, apta tamen)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 228.

11 Do not begin your wooing with the maid.
(Non tibi ab ancilla est incipienda Venus.)

OVID, Ars Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 386

Who could not win the mistress wooed the maid.
POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. i, l. 206.

Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan:
Some men must love my lady and some Joan.

SHAKESPEARE, Love's Labour's Lost. Act iii,
sc. 1, l. 206.

12 He that would the daughter win,
Must with the mother first begin.

JOHN RAY, English Proverbs.

13 Friendship is constant in all other things
Save in the office and affairs of love.

Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues;

Let every eye negotiate for itself
And trust no agent.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing. Act
ii, sc. 1, l. 182.

14 If thou dost love, promise me it faithfully.
Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown and be perverse and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo: but else, not for the world.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act ii, sc. 2,
l. 94.

15 Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels often in their silent kind
More than quick words do move a woman's mind.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act iii, sc. 1, l. 99.

Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Though e'er so black, say they have angels faces.

That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot woo a woman.
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act iii, sc. 1, l. 102.

Say that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart:
Write till your ink be dry and with your tears
Moist it again, and frame some feeling line.
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act iii, sc. 2, l. 73.

Giving presents to a woman to secure her love, is as vain as endeavouring to fill a sieve with water.
EDWARD WARD, Female Policy, 13: (1716)

For courtesy wins woman all as well
As valour may.
TENNYSON, The Last Tournament, l. 702.

Perhaps if you address the lady
Most politely, most politely—
Flatter and impress the lady.
Most politely, most politely—
Humbly beg and humbly sue—
She may deign to look on you.
W. S. GILBERT, Princess Ida. Act I.

IV—Wooring: Faint Heart and Fair Lady

And let us mind, faint heart ne'er wan
A lady fair:
Wha does the utmost that he can
Will whyles do mair.
BURNS, Epistle to Dr. Blacklock.

Remember the old saying, "Faint heart never won fair lady."
CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 10.

Ah fool! faint heart fair lady ne'er could win.
PHINEAS FLETCHER, Britain's Ida. Canto v, st.
1. Sometimes wrongly attributed to Edmund Spenser.

Then have amongst ye once again,
Faint hearts fair ladies never win.
UNKNOWN, A Proper Ballad in Praise of My Lady Marquess. (1569)

Faint heart, hath been a common phrase,
Fair lady never wives.
UNKNOWN, The Rocks of Regard. (1576)

Brisk confidence still best with woman copes;
Pique her and soothe in turns, anon passion crowns thy hopes.

BYRON, Childe Harold. Canto ii, st. 34.
Thus the Soldier arm'd with Resolution
Told his soft Tale, and was a thriving Wooer.
CRANZ, Richard III (altered). Act ii, sc. 1.

But as men say, Where heart is failed,
There shall no castle be assailed.
JOHN GOWEN, Confessio Amantis. Bk. v, l.
6573. (c. 1390)

Come not cringing to win me!
Take me with triumph and power,
As a warrior stomps a fortress!
I will not shrink or cower.
Come, as you came, in the desert
Be a weary woman and man.

When the tiger passions were in us,
And love as you loved me then!
WILLIAM WETMORE STORRY, Cleopatra.

From the Desert I come to thee
On a stallion shod with fire,
And the winds are left behind
In the speed of my desire.
BAYARD TAYLOR, Bedouin Song.

To get thine ends, lay bashfulness aside;
Who fears to ask, doth teach to be deny'd.
ROBERT HERICK, No Bashfulness in Begging

I'll woo her as the lion woos his brides.
JOHN HOME, Douglas. Act i, sc. 1.

I now will court her in the conqueror's style;
"Come, see, and overcome."
MASSINGER, The Maid of Honour. Act ii, sc. 1.

The adventurous lover is successful still.
POPE, Prologue for Mr. D'Urfay's Last Play.

A pressing lover seldom wants success,
Whilst the respectful, like the Greek, sits down
And wastes a ten years' siege before one town.
NICHOLAS ROWE, To the Inconstant: Epilogue,
l. 18.

He her chamber-window will ascend
And with a corded ladder fetch her down.
SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act iii, sc. 1, l. 39.

He that climbs the tall tree has won right to the fruit,
He that leaps the wide gulf should prevail in his suit.

SCOTT, The Talisman. Ch. 26.

Ah, me! it was he that won her
Because he dared to climb!
THOMAS BAILEY ALDRICH, Nocturne.

Never give her o'er;
For scorn at first makes after-love the more.
If she do frown, 'tis not in hate of you,
But rather to beget more love in you:
If she do chide, 'tis not to have you gone,
For why, the fools are mad, if left alone.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona.
Act iii, sc. 1, l. 94.

Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
What though the rose have prickles, yet 'tis pluck'd.
SHAKESPEARE, Venus and Adonis, l. 573.

He that after ten denials
Dares attempt no further trials,
Hath no warrant to acquire
The dainties of his chaste desire.
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Wooring Stuff.

Bring therefore all the forces that ye may,
And lay incessant battery to her heart;
Pleints, prayers, vows, ruth, sorrow, and did may;
Those engines can the proudest love convert.

And, if those fail, fall down and die before her;
So dying live, and living do adore her.
EDMUND SPENSER, Amoretti. Sonnet xiv.

V—Wooring: Pursuer and Pursued

1 While I am I, and you are you,
So long as the world contains us both,
Me the loving and you the loth,
While the one eludes, must the other pursue.
ROBERT BROWNING, Life in a Love.

In fact, 'tis the season of billing and cooling,
Amorous flying and fond pursuing.
ROBERT BUCHANAN, Fine Weather on the Di- gentia. Pt. i, st. 1.

2 'Tis leap year, lady, and therefore very good to enter a courtier.

GEORGE CHAPMAN, Bussy d'Ambros. Act i, sc.
1. (1608) The custom of women proposing in leap year is said to have originated from a law passed in Scotland in 1228; another legend attributes it to St. Patrick.

Alas! to seize the moment
When heart inclines to heart,
And press a suit with passion,
Is not a woman's part.

If man come not to gather
The roses where they stand,
They fade among their foliage;
They cannot seek his hand.
BRYANT, Song. From the Spanish of Iglesias.

What then in love can woman do?
If we grow fond they shun us;
And when we fly them, they pursue,
And leave us when they've won us.
JOHN GAY, The Beggar's Opera. Act iii, sc. 8

We cannot fight for love, as men may do;
We should be woo'd and were not made to woo.
SHAKESPEARE, A Midsummer-Night's Dream.
Act ii, sc. 1, l. 241.

Though I lov'd you well, I woo'd you not;
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man,
Or that we women had men's privilege
Of speaking first.
SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida. Act iii, sc.
2, l. 134.

3 Most complying, When denying,
And to be follow'd only flying.
WILLIAM CONGREVE, Similar to Jupiter.

4 Flee it [love], and it will flee thee,
Follow it, and it will follow thee.
THOMAS HOWELL, H. His Devises, 64. (1581)

I have pursued her as love hath pursued me;
which hath been on the wing of all occasions. . . .
And that hath taught me to say this:
"Love like a shadow flies when substance love
pursues;
Fleeing that that flies, and flying what pursues."

SHAKESPEARE, The Merry Wives of Windsor.
Act ii, sc. 2, l. 208. (1600)

5 Follow a shadow, it still flies you,
Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you.
Say are not women truly, then,
Styld but the shadows of us men?
BEN JONSON, That Women Are but Men's Shadows.

Flee, and she follows; follow, and she'll flee;
Than she there's none more coy; there's none more fond than she.
FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblems. Bk. i, No. 4.

6 Coy Hebe flies from those that woo,
And shuns the hands would seize upon her;
Follow thy life, and she will sue
To pour for thee the cup of honor.
J. R. LOWELL, Hebe. St. 7.

7 You pursue, I fly; you fly, I pursue. Such is my mind. (Insequeris, fugio; fugis, insequor; hec mihi mens est.)
MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. v, epig. 83.

8 'Tis the quarry that flees that the hunter follows; what he takes he leaves behind, and ever strains to the prey ahead. (Venator sequitur fugientia; sapta relinquit Semper et inventis ulteriora petit.)
OVID, Amores. Bk. ii, eleg. 9, l. 9.

Many women desire what flees them; they hate what is too forward. (Quod refugit, multae cupiunt: odere quod instat.)
OVID, Art Amatoria. Bk. i, l. 717.

9 Ah, whither shall a maiden flee,
When a bold youth so swift pursues,
And siege of tenderness courtesy,
With hope perseverant, still renews?
COVENTRY PATMORE, The Angel in the House:
Canto xii, The Chase.

10 You think that you are Ann's suitor; that you are the pursuer and she the pursued; that it is your part to woo, to persuade, to prevail, to overcome. Fool: it is you who are the pursued, the marked-down quarry, the destined prey.

BERNARD SHAW, Man and Superman. Act ii.
Pursued man loves to think himself pursuer.
EDMUND VANCE COOKE, From the Book of Es- timations: Rusk.

A man always chases a woman until she catches
him.

UNKNOWN. (Columnist in El Paso Times.)

11 My love is male and proper-man
And what he'd have he'd get by chase,
So I must cheat as women can
And keep my love from off my face.
'Tis folly to my dawning, thrifty thought
That I must run, who in the end am caught.
ANNA WICKHAM, The Contemplative Quarry.

VI—Woofing and Repenting

1
Of her scorn the maid repented,
And the shepherd of his love.

ANNA LETITIA BARBAULD, Leave Me, Simple Shepherd.

2
And she, she lies in my hand as tame
As a late pear basking over the wall;
Just a touch to try and off it came;
'Tis mine—can I let it fall?

ROBERT BROWNING, A Light Woman.

That you're in a terrible taking,
By all these sweet oglings I see,
But the fruit that will fall without shaking,
Indeed is too mellow for me.

LADY MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, To a Lady Making Love.

3
For this is a sort of engagement, you see,
Which is binding on you but not binding on me.

WILLIAM ALLEN BUTLER, Nothing to Wear.

I'm jilted, forsaken, outwitted;
Yet think not I'll whimper or bawl—
The lass is alone to be pitied
Who ne'er has been courted at all; . . .
What though at my heart he has tilted,
What though I have met with a fall?
Better be courted and jilted

Then never be courted at all.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Jilted Nymph
Never wedding, ever wooing,
Still a love-lorn heart pursuing,
Read you not the wrong you're doing
In my cheek's pale hue?

All my life with sorrow strewing—
Wed, or cease to woo.

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Maid's Remonstrance.

5
It's better to change your attitude an' pay some heart balm than to be dug up later an' analyzed.

KIN HUBBARD, Abe Martin's Broadcast, p. 85.

6
A fool there was and he made his prayer
(Even as you and I!)
To a rag and a bone and a hank of hair
(We called her the woman who did not care)
But the fool he called her his lady fair—
(Even as you and I!)

RUDYARD KIPPLING, The Vampire. St. 1. Written to accompany the description of Burne-Jones's picture, "The Vampire," in the catalogue of the 1897 summer exhibition of the New Gallery, London.

Ye shall know my breach of promise.

Old Testament: Numbers, xiv, 34.

Chops and Tomato sauce. Yours, Pickwick.
Chops! Gracious heavens! and Tomato sauce!
Gentlemen, is the happiness of a sensitive and confiding female to be trifled away by such shallow artifices as these?

DICKENS, Pickwick Papers. Ch. 34.

Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, on Wednesday in Wheeson week, when the priace broke thy head for liking his father to a singing-man of Windsor, thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me thy lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it?

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act II, sc. 1, l. 93.

8
Who wooed in haste, and means to wed at leisure.

STEWART CHAPLIN, The Stained-Glass Political Platform, (Century Mag., June, 1900, p. 305.)

One of our defects as a nation is a tendency to use what have been called "weasel words." When a weasel sucks an egg, the meat is sucked out of the egg; and if you use a "weasel word" after another there is nothing left of the other.

A very great part of the mischiefs that vex this world arises from words.

EDMUND BURKE, Letter. (c. 1795)

Words, words that gender things!
 SIR RICHARD BURTON, Kashida Pt. vii, st. 4.

But words are things; and a small drop of ink,
 Falling like dew, upon a thought, produces
 That which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto III, st. 88.

Words lead to things; a scale is more precise,— Coarse speech, bad grammar, swearing, drinking, vice.

O. W. HOLMES, A Rhymed Lesson, l. 374.

8 Well, "slithy" means "lithe and slimy." . . . You see it's like a portmanteau—there are two meanings packed up into one word.

LEWIS CARROLL, Through the Looking-Glass.

Ch. 6. Hence "portmanteau word," a word formed by combining the elements of two other words.

Pennyboy: Emissaries? stay, there's a fine new word, Tom;

Pray God it signify anything! what are emissaries?

Thomas: Men employed outward, that are sent abroad

To fetch in the commodity.

BEN JONSON, The Staple of News. Act I, sc. 1.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a good soldier-like word; and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. Accommodated: that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is, being, whereby, a man may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

SHAKESPEARE, II Henry IV. Act III, sc. 2, l. 82.

6 "The question is," said Alice, "whether you can make words mean so many different things."

"The question is," said Humpty Dumpty, "which is to be master—that's all."

LEWIS CARROLL, Through the Looking-Glass. Ch. 6.

7 Words are the dress of thoughts; which should no more be presented in rags, tatters, and dirt, than your person should.

ROBERT BROWNING, A Woman's Last Word.

Words like wildfire.

SHAKESPEARE, The Rape of Lucrece. St. 217.

12 What is so insane as the empty sound of words, however well-chosen and elegant, if there is no foundation of sense or sagacity?
(Quid enim est tam furiosum quam verborum vel optimorum atque amantissimorum sonitus inanis, nulla subjecta sententia nec scientia?)
CICERO, De Oratore. Bk. i, sec. 51.

What is so furious and Bethlehem-like as a vain sound of chosen and excellent words?

BEN JONSON, Explorata: Lingua Sapientis.

13 A barren superfluity of words.

GARTH, The Dispensary. Canto II, l. 95.

A meaningless torrent of words. (Inanis ver-borum torrens.)

QUINTILLIAN, De Institutione Oratoria. Bk.
x, ch. 7, sec. 23.

14 Do not go forth on the gale with every sail set into an ocean of words.

HIPPAS. (PLATO, Protagoras. Sec. 338.)

15 He multiplieth words without knowledge.

Old Testament: Job, xxxv, 16.

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?

Old Testament: Job, xxviii, 2.

In a multitude of words there will certainly be error. (Yen to pl shif.)

UNKNOWN. A Chinese proverb.

1 A glutton of words.
LANGLAND, Piers the Plowman. PASSUS I, l. 139.

2 He can compress the most words into the smallest ideas of any man I ever met.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, of a fellow lawyer. (Gross, Lincoln's Own Stories, p. 36.)

3 The world pays itself with words; there is little plumbing of the depths of things. (Le monde se paye de paroles; peu approfondissement les choses.)

BLAISE PASCAL, Lettres Provinciales, li.

4 Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found.
POPE, Essay on Criticism. Pt. II, l. 109.

Putting all his words together,
'Tis three blue beans in one blue bladder.

MATTHEW PRIOR, Alma. Canto I, l. 27.

5 He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink.

JOHN RAY, On the Creation.

6 Words enough, but little wisdom. (Satis eloquentiae, sapientiae parum.)

SALLUST, Cataline. Ch. 5, sec. 5.

Words, words, mere words, no matter from the heart.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida, v, 3, 108.

A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off.

SHAKESPEARE, The Two Gentlemen of Verona. Act II, sc. 4, l. 33.

The artillery of words.

SWIFT, Ode to Sancho, l. 13.

7 Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words Since I first call'd my brother's father dad.

SHAKESPEARE, King John. Act II, sc. 2, l. 466.

I was ne'er so thrummed since I was a gentleman.

DEKKER, The Honest Whore. Act IV, sc. 2.

8 Thou wilt be like a lover presently And tire the hearer with a book of words.

SHAKESPEARE, Much Ado About Nothing, I, 1, 309.

Discourse fustian with one's own shadow.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act II, sc. 3, l. 282.

This helpless smoke of words.

14 Be not rash with thy mouth; . . . let thy words be few.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, v, 2.

When looks were fond and words were few.

ALLAN CUNNINGHAM, Poet's Bridal-day Song.

15 Few words, but proceeding from a heart filled with truth. (Pauca Verba sed a pleno venientia pectore veri.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civilium. Bk. ix, l. 188.

16 He that hath knowledge spareth his words.

Old Testament: Proverbs, xvii, 27.

As it is the mark of great minds to be able to say much in few words, so it is the mark of little ones to speak much and to say nothing. (Comme c'est le caractère des grands esprits de faire entendre en peu de paroles beaucoup de choses, les petits esprits, au contraire, ont le don de beaucoup parler, et de ne rien dire.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 142.

16a Tower of ivory. (Tour d'ivoire.)

CHARLES-AUGUSTIN SAINT-BEUVE, Peintures d'Asie: A. M. Villenave. St. 3. (1837)

Sainte-Beuve compares Victor Hugo to a feudal baron with his armor on ready to fight, and then says of Alfred de Vigny:

Et Vigny, plus secret,

Comme en sa tour d'ivoire, avant midi, rentrait.

17 Men of few words are the best men.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry V. Act III, sc. 2, l. 39.

I know thou'rt full of love and honesty, And weigh'st thy words before thou givest them breath.

SHAKESPEARE, Othello. Act III, sc. 3, l. 118.

18 Deep in my heart subsides the infrequent word, And there dies slowly throbbing like a wounded bird.

FRANCIS THOMSON, Her Portrait. St. 3

X—Words: Their Beauty

What things have we seen Done at the Mermaid! heard words that have been

So nimble and so full of subtle flame
As if that every one from whence they came
Had meant to put his whole wit in a jest,
And resolved to live a fool the rest
Of his dull life.

FRANCIS DRAUMONT, Letter to Ben Jonson.

God wove a web of loveliness,
Of clouds and stars and birds,
But made not any thing at all
So beautiful as words.

ANNA HEMPTZAD BRANCH, Her Words.

My words are little jars
For you to take and put upon a shelf.
Their shapes are quaint and beautiful,
And they have many pleasant colours and lustres

To recommend them.
Also the scent from them fills the room
With sweetness of flowers and crushed grasses.

AMY LOWELL, A Gift.

Such little, puny things are words in rhyme:
Poor feeble loops and strokes as frail as hairs;
You see them printed here, and mark their chase,
And turn to your more durable affairs.
Yet on such petty tools the poet dares
To run his race with mortar, bricks and lime,
And daws his frail stick to the point, and starts
To aim his arrow at the heart of Time.

CHRISTOPHER MORLEY, Quickening.

Words, like fine flowers, have their colours too.
ERNEST RHYE, Words.

I love smooth words, like gold-enameled fish
Which circle slowly with a silken swish,
And tender ones, like downy-feathered birds:
Words shy and dappled, deep-eyed deer in herds

ELINOR WYLLIE, Pretty Words.

XI—Words: Their Finality

A word once spoken revoked can not be.

ALEXANDER BARCLAY, Skyp of Polys, p. 108.
(1509)

Boys flying kites haul in their white winged birds,
You can't do that way when you're flying words,
"Careful with fire," is good advice we know;
"Careful with words," is ten times doubly so.
Thoughts unexpressed may sometimes fall back
dead;

But God Himself can't tell them when they're said.

WILLIAM CARLSON, First Sabbath's Story, St. 21.

A word spoken is an arrow loosed.

THOMAS FELLER, Goodwill to the World.

The arrow belongs not to the archer when it has once left the bow; the word no longer belongs to the speaker when it has once passed his lips.

HARRIS, Religion and Philosophy, Preface.

Winged words. (ἄερα πτερύματα.)

HOMER, Iliad, Bk. xx, l. 531. This phrase occurs 46 times in the Iliad and 53 times in the Odyssey.

Winged words. (Geflügelte Worte.)

GEORGE BÜCHMANN. Title of his book on proverbs and famous phrases.

Our words have wings, but fly not where we would.

GEORGE ELIOT, The Spanish Gypsy, Bk. III.

It is as easy to recall a stone thrown violently from the hand as a word which has left your tongue. (Ὅδ' ἐκ χειρὸς μολίβδα καρτερὸν λίθος ῥέει καταρχαί, οὐδ' ἀπὸ γλῶσσας λόγος.)

MENANDER, Fragments Frag. 1092K.

The word once spoken flies beyond recall. (Semel emissum volat irrevocabile verbum.)

HORACE, Epistles Bk. i, ep. 18, l. 71

The written word, unpublished, can be destroyed,
but the spoken word can never be recalled (Delere licetbit Quod non edideris; nescit vox missa reverti.)

HORACE, Art Poetica, l. 389.

Look out how you use proud words.

When you let proud words go, it is not easy to call them back.

CARL SANDBURG, Primer Lesson.

O! many a shaft, at random sent,
Finds mark the archer little meant!
And many a word at random spoken
May soothe or wound a heart that's broken!
SCOTT, Lord of the Isles. Canto v, st. 18.

XII—Word and Deed

See also Example and Precept; Preaching and Practice

There is no man but speaketh more honestly than he can do or think.

BACON, Advancement of Learning, Bk. II.

Do as we say, and not as we do. (Faites ce que nous disons, et ne faites pas ce que nous faisons.)

BOCCACCIO, Decameron. Day III, tale 7. (French translation by Sabatier de Castres.)

Do you that good which I say, but not that ill which I do.

JACQUES MAYER, Celestina, p. 27. (1631)

The common saying of "Do as I say, not as I do" is usually reversed in the actual experience of life.
SAMUEL JOHNSON, Self-Help, Ch. 12.

I see that saying and doing are two things, and hereafter I shall better observe this distinction.

JOHN BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress, Pt. I.

Saying and doing are two things.

Saying is one thing, doing another. (Le dire est autre chose que le faire.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. li, ch. 31.

Without doubt it is a delightful harmony when doing and saying go together. (C'est sans doute une belle harmonie, quand le faire et le dire vont ensemble.)

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. li, ch. 31.

This, young man, is harder for me to say than to do.

JULIUS CÆSAR, to Metellus. (PLUTARCH, Lives: Cæsar.)

Such things are easier said than done, I see. (Magis istuc percipimus lingua didi, quam factis fore.)

PLAUTUS, Asinaria, l. 162. (Act i, sc. 3.)

Easier said than done. (Id dictu quæm re, ut plerique, facilius.)

LIVY, History. Bk. xxxi, sec. 38.

That is . . . sooner said than done.

JOHN HEYWOOD, Proverbs. Pt. ii, ch. 5. (1546)

A controversy that affords

Actions for arguments, not words.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto 1, l. 871.

It's a long step from saying to doing.

CERVANTES, Don Quixote. Pt. ii, ch. 34.

Plato saith, who-so that can him read,

The words must be cousin to the deed.

CHAUCER, Canterbury Tales: Prologue, l. 741.

The wise Plato saith, as ye may read,

The word must needs accorde with the deed.

CHAUCER, Mausciples Tale, l. 205.

His deeds do not agree with his words. (Facta ejus cum dictis discrepant.)

CICERO, De Finibus. Bk. ii, sec. 30.

Let deeds correspond with words. (Dictis facta suppetant.)

PLAUTUS, Pseudolus, l. 108. (Act i, sc. 1.)

Thy actions to thy words accord.

MILTON, Paradise Regained. Bk. iii, l. 9.

Say well and do well, end with a letter,

Say well is good, but do well is better.

JOHN CLARKE, Pericliologia, 194.

Though language forms the preacher,

'Tis "good works" make the man.

ELIZA COKE, Good Works.

Good words and ill deeds deceive wise and fools.

JOHN DAVIES, Scourge of Folly, 46. (1611)

That you can speak so well, and do so ill!

MASINGHAM, The Fatal Dowry. Act iv, sc. 4.

What pity 'tis, one that can speak so well,

Should, in his actions, be so ill.

MASINGHAM, Partnership of Love. Act iii, sc. 3.

Feeble deeds are vainer far than words.

BENJAMIN DRABAZZ, Syll. Bk. iv, ch. 3.

Go put your creed into the deed,

Nor speak with double tongue.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON, Ode: Concord.

Words and deeds are quite indifferent forms of the divine energy. Words are also actions, and actions are a kind of words.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

Never should this thing have been,

That words with men should more avail than deeds.

(Ἀσθενέστερον οὐκ ἔσθ' ἢ πλεονεκτήματα τῶν πραγμάτων τῶν γλώσσας ἐχούσιν ἄλλω.)

EURIPIDES, Hecuba, l. 1187.

Deeds not words.

FLETCHER, The Lover's Progress. Act iii, sc. 6.

For now the field is not far off

Where we must give the world a proof

Of deeds, not words.

BUTLER, Hudibras. Pt. i, canto 1, l. 867.

Deeds are males, words are females.

JOHN FLORIO, First Fruits. Fo. 32. (1578) "Le parole son femmine, i fatti son maschi" has a point in Italian which it lacks in English.

They say in Italy, that deeds are men, and words are but women.

JAMES HOWELL, Familiar Letters. Bk. i, sec. 5, letter 21.

Words are women, deeds are men.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacula Prudentum. (1640) In frequent use thereafter.

I am not yet so lost in lexicography as to forget that words are the daughters of the earth, and that things are the sons of heaven.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Dictionary of the English Language: Preface.

Words are the daughters of earth, and deeds are the sons of heaven.

SIR WILLIAM JONES. Translating a Hindoo proverb.

Words are men's daughters, but God's sons are things.

SAMUEL MADDEN, Boswell's Monument. Said to have been inserted by Dr. Johnson.

Well done is better than well said.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1737.

Saying and doing have quarrelled and parted.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1756.

Good words without deeds are rushes and weeds.

THOMAS FULLER, Gnomologia. No. 6247.

If you'd pooh-pooh this monarch's plan,

Pooh-pooh it;

But when he says he'll hang a man

He'll do it.

W. S. GILBERT, Princess Ida. Act II.

WORDSWORTH, WILLIAM

17 Time may restore us in his course
Goethe's sage mind and Byron's force;
But where will Europe's latter hour
Again find Wordsworth's healing power?
MATTHEW ARNOLD, Memorial Verses.

18 No poet ever took himself more seriously than did William Wordsworth; however wide his outlook, he lived as a sectary in a closed system, and imagined that whatever he happened to think was of primary importance.

ROBERT BRIDGES, Collected Essays. Vol. ii.

19 Just for a handful of silver he left us,
Just for a riband to stick in his coat—
Found the one gift of which fortune bereft us,
Lost all the others she lets us devote.

ROBERT BROWNING, The Lost Leader. Wordsworth's acceptance of the laureateship and a pension had seemed a defection from the Liberal cause.

20 That mild apostate from poetic rule,
The simple Wordsworth, framer of a lay
As soft as evening in his favourite May, . . .
Who, both by precept and example, shows
That prose is verse, and verse is merely prose.
BROWN, English Bards, Scotch Reviewers, l. 236.

Yet not to vulgar Wordsworth let us stoop,
The meanest object of the lowly group,
Whose verse, of all but childish prattle void,
Seems blessed harmony to Lamb and Lloyd.

BYRON, English Bards, Scotch Reviewers, I. 903.

Let simple Wordsworth chime his childish verse.

BYRON, English Bards, Scotch Reviewers, I. 917.

1 One finds also a kind of sincerity in his speech
But for prolixity, thinness, endless dilution, it excels all the other speech I have heard from mortals.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Essays: Wordsworth.

2 Is Wordsworth a bell with a wooden tongue?
R. W. EMERSON, Journals, 1863.

3 This will never do!

FRANCIS LORD JEFFREY, Review, of Wordsworth's Excursion (Edinburgh Review).

Although Jeffrey completely failed to recognize Wordsworth's real greatness, he was yet not wrong in saying of the Excursion as a work of poetic style, "This will never do!"

MATTHEW ARNOLD, Poems of William Wordsworth: Preface.

4 A modern Moses who sits on Pisgah with his back obstinately turned to that promised land, the Future, he is only fit for those old maid
tabbies, the Muses.

DOUGLAS JERROLD, Review of Wordsworth's Poems.

5 To William Wordsworth, true philosopher and inspired poet, who, by the special gift and calling of Almighty God, whether he sang of man or of nature, failed not to lift up men's hearts to holy things.

JOHN KEBLE, Lectures on Poetry: Dedication.

6 Wordsworth in sonnet is a classic too
And on that grass plot sits at Milton's side.

W. S. LANDOR, To the Author of Festus.

7 We are not called upon to place great men of his stamp as if they were collegians in a class-list.

JOHN MORLEY, Miscellanies: Introduction to Wordsworth.

8 To his own self not always just,
Bound in the bonds that all men share,—
Confess the failings as we must,
The lion's mark is always there!
Nor any song so pure, so great,
Since his, who closed the sightless eyes,
Our Homer of the war in Heaven,
To wake in his own Paradise.

FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE, Wordsworth.

9 This hovel greener from the brows
Of him that utter'd nothing here.

TYNDRAL, To the Queen.

10 Wordsworth, thy music like a river rolls

Among the mountains, and thy song is fed
By living springs far up the watershed.

HENRY VAN DYKE, Wordsworth.

11 What hadst thou that could make such large amends—

For all thou hadst not, and thy peers possessed,

Motion and fire, swift means to radiant ends?

Thou hadst, for weary feet, the gift of rest
WILLIAM WATSON, Wordsworth's Grave, II, 3

God's own work to do on earth!

JOHN KEBLE, The Christian Year: Palm Sunday.

My new-cut ashlar takes the light
Where crimson-blank the windows flare;
By my own work, before the night,
Great Overseer, I make my prayer.
RUDYARD KIPLING, A Dedication.

Father, I scarcely dare to pray,
So clear I see, now it is done,
How I have wasted half my day,
And left my work but just begun.
HELEN HUNT JACKSON, A Last Prayer.

But till we are built like angels—with hammer and chisel and pen,
We will work for ourself and a woman, for ever and ever, amen.

RUDYARD KIPLING, An Imperial Rescript.

This we learned from famous men,
Knowing not its uses,
When they showed, in daily work,
Man must finish off his work—
Right or wrong, his daily work—
And without excuses.

RUDYARD KIPLING, A School Song.

The Sons of Mary seldom bother, for they have inherited that good part;
But the Sons of Martha favour their Mother of the careful soul and the troubled
heart.

And because she lost her temper once, and because she was rude to the Lord her Guest,
Her Sons must wait upon Mary's Sons, world without end, reprieve, or rest.

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Sons of Martha. St. 1.

And the Sons of Mary smile and are blessed—they know the angels are on their side.
They know in them is the Grace confessed, and for them are the Mercies multiplied.

They sit at the Feet—they hear the Word—they see how truly the Promise runs.

They have cast their burden upon the Lord, and —the Lord He lays it on Martha's Sons!

RUDYARD KIPLING, The Sons of Martha. St. 8.

And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha,
Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things. But one thing is needful; and Mary has chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her.

New Testament: Luke, x, 41, 42.

Each morning sees some task begin,
Each evening sees it close;
Something attempted, something done,
Has earned a night's repose.

H. W. LONGFELLOW, The Village Blacksmith.

No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him; there is always work,
And tools to work withal, for those who will.
J. R. LOWELL, A Glance Behind the Curtain,
l. 202.

The field, the wheel, the desk have called once
more,
And we have stooped to pick the slender threads

By which we weave the patterns of our pride.
SCUDDER MIDDLETON, Jessabel.

Man hath his daily work of body or mind

MILTON, Paradise Lost. Bk. iv, l. 618.

The work of the world must still be done,
And minds are many though truth be one.
HENRY NEWBOLT, The Echo.

Establish thou the work of our hands upon us: yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

Old Testament: Psalms, xc, 17.

Work, as though work alone thine end could gain;

But pray to God as though all work were vain.
D'ARCY WESTWORTH THOMPSON, Sales Attici.
Paraphrasing Euripides.

O men, the greatest part of our work is accomplished; away with all fear as to what remains. (Maxima res effecta, viri; timor omnis abesto Quod superest.)

It is work which gives flavor to life.
AMIEL, Journal, 21 March, 1881.

1 Don't worry and fret, faint-hearted,
The chances have just begun,
For the best jobs haven't been started,
The best work hasn't been done.
BERTON BRALEY, No Chance.

2 Get leave to work
In this world,—'tis the best you get at all.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. iii, l. 164.

Free men freely work:
Whoever fears God, fears to sit at ease.
E. B. BROWNING, Aurora Leigh, Bk. viii, l. 784.

3 Man's work is to labour and heaven—
As best he may—earth here with heaven;
'Tis work for work's sake that he's needing.
ROBERT BROWNING, Of Pacchiarotto, St. 21.

4 Work is a grand cure for all the maladies and miseries that ever beset mankind—honest work, which you intend getting done.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Inaugural Address, Edinburgh, 2 April, 1866.

Genuine Work alone, what thou workest faithfully, that is eternal, as the Almighty Founder and World-Builder himself.

CARLYLE, Past and Present, Bk. ii, ch. 17.

All work . . . is noble; work is alone noble.

CARLYLE, Past and Present, Bk. iii, ch. 4.

Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness.

CARLYLE, Past and Present, Bk. iii, ch. 11.

The "wages" of every noble work do yet lie in Heaven or else nowhere.

CARLYLE, Past and Present, Bk. iii, ch. 12.

5 The best worship, however, is stout working.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Letter to His Wife.

The glory of a workman, still more of a master-workman, that he does his work well, ought to be his most precious possession, like the "honour of a soldier" dearer to him than life.

THOMAS CARLYLE, Shooting Niagara, Sec. 7.

6 Work, and your house shall be duly fed:

Work, and rest shall be won;

I hold that a man had better be dead
Than alive when his work is done.

ALICE CARY, Work.

Work and thou wilt bless the day

Ere the toil be done;

They that work not, can not pray,

Can not feel the sun.

God is living, working still,

All things work and move;

Work, or lose the power to will,

Lose the power to love.

J. S. DWIGHT, Working.

7 Honor lies in honest toil.

GROVER CLEVELAND, Letter Accepting Nomination for President, 18 August, 1884.

8 Night and day! night and day!

Sound the song the hours rehearse!

Work and play! work and play!

The order of the universe.

JOHN DAVIDSON, Piper, Play.

Give me simple laboring folk,

Who love their work,

Whose virtue is a song

To cheer God along.

H. D. THOREAU, A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.

9 There is no substitute for hard work.

THOMAS A. EDISON, (Golden Book, April, 1931.)

As a cure for worrying, work is better than whiskey.

THOMAS A. EDISON, Interview on Prohibition.

Hard work is the best investment a man can make.

C. M. SCHWAB, Ten Commandments of Success.

10 The high prize of life, the crowning fortune of a man, is to be born with a bias to some pursuit which finds him in employment and happiness.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Considerations by the Way.

Truly, one thing is sweet

Of things beneath the Sun;

This, that a man should earn his bread and eat,
Rejoicing in his work which he hath done.

JOSEPHINE PRESTON PEABODY, The Singing Man.

11 I look on that man as happy, who, when there is question of success, looks into his work for a reply.

EMERSON, Conduct of Life: Worship.

Too busy with the crowded hour to fear to live or die.

EMERSON, Quatrains: Nature.

The sum of wisdom is, that the time is never lost that is devoted to work.

15 Your work and labour of love.

New Testament: Hebrews, vi, 10.

And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;

And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;

But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star,

Shall draw the Thing as he sees It, for the God of Things as They Are!

REIDYARD KIPLING, The Seven Seas: L'Envoi.

1 He that works after his own manner, his head aches not at the matter.

GEORGE HERBERT, Jacobs Prudentium.

If you work for yourself you do it for your own amusement, which is all right; if you work for others, you reap nothing but ingratitude.

I—World: Definitions

The world is a great poem, and the world's
The words it is writ in, and we souls the thoughts.
P. J. BAILEY, Faustus: Everywhere.

The created world is but a small parenthesis in eternity.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Christian Morals. Pt.
III, sec. 29.

The world was made to be inhabited by beasts,
but studied and contemplated by man.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. I,
sec. 13.

The world to me is but a dream or mock-show, and we all therein but Pantaloon and Antics, to my severer contemplations.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. I,
sec. 41.

For the world, I count it not an inn, but an hospital, and a place, not to live, but to die in.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. II,
sec. 11. See also JOURN. AM. LIVES.

The severe schools shall never teach me out of the philosophy of Heraclitus, that this visible world is but a picture of the invisible, wherein, as in a portrait, things are not truly, but in equivocal shapes, and thereby counterfeited some more real substance in that invisible fabric.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. 4,
sec. 15.

Hath this world, without me wrought,
Other substance than my thought?
Lives it by my sense alone,
Or by essence of its own?

FRANCIS HENRY HEDGE, Questionings.

The visible world is but man turned inside out that he may be revealed to himself.

HENRY JAMES THE ELDER. (J. A. KELLOGG, Digest of the Philosophy of Henry James.)

This outer world is but the pictured scroll
Of worlds within the soul;
A coloured chart, a blazoned missal-book,
Whereon who rightly look
May spell the splendours with their mortal eyes,
And steer to Paradise.

ALFRED NOYES, The Two Worlds.

My God, I would not live
Save that I think this gross hard-seeming world
Is our misshaping vision of the Powers
Behind the world, that make our griefs our gains.

TENNENTSON, The Sisters, l. 223.

The true mystery of the world is the visible, not the invisible.

OSCAR WILDE, Picture of Dorian Gray. Ch. 2.

What, in fact, is the world? A glass which shines,
Which a breath has made, and which a breath can destroy.

by Harry Thurston Peck, which had appeared in the issue of The Bookman for February, 1897 (p. 510), and in which Mr. Peck had said, "The world is not beautiful to him, but a prison-house."

¹² The world is a looking glass, and gives back to every man the reflection of his own face.
Frown at it and it will in turn look sourly upon you; laugh at it and with it, and it is a jolly kind companion.

THACKERAY, Vanity Fair. Ch. 2.

The world is a mirror of infinite beauty, yet no man sees it. It is a Temple of Majesty, yet no man regards it. It is a region of Light and Peace, did not men disquiet it. It is the Paradise of God.
THOMAS TRAHERNE, Centuries of Meditations.

¹³ The world is but a frozen kind of gas
A transient ice we sport on, where, alas!
Diverted by the pictures in the glass,
We heed not the Realities that pass.

J. T. TROWBRIDGE, Idealist.

¹⁴ What is this world? A net to snare the soul.
GEORGE WHETSTONE, The World.

¹⁵ I have often said, and oftener think, that this world is a comedy to those that think, a tragedy to those that feel—a solution of why
Democritus laughed and Heraclitus wept.

HORACE WALPOLE, Letter to Sir Horace Mann,
31 Dec., 1769.

¹⁶ The world's a prophecy of worlds to come.
YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night vii, l. 16.

¹⁷ What a dark world—who knows?—
Ours to inhabit is!

One touch and what a strange

Glory might burst on us,

What a hid universe!

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. ii, ch. 36.

All the world must practice stage-playing. We must play our parts duly.

MONTAIGNE, Essays. Bk. iii, ch. 10.

⁵ I hold the world but as the world, Gratiano;
A stage where every man must play a part.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice. Act i,
sc. 1, l. 77.

All the world's a stage.

And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lined,
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipshod pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side,
His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sane sleep, sane eyes, sane wit, sane every thing.
SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act ii, sc. 7, l.
139.

The child, when by how can't he learn to act first step upon the ground, delights to play with his joints, this joint in position and at length puts it aside, and changes every hour. The boundaries of youth, freed at last from his tutor, finds joy in horses and hounds and the grass of the sunny Campos, soft as wax for moulding to evil, peevish with his counsellors, slow to make needful provision, lavish of money, spirited, of strong desires, but swift to change his fancies. With altered aims, the age and spirit of the man seeks wealth and friends, becomes a slave to ambition.

... Many ill's encompass an old man; ... he lacks fire and courage, is dilatory and slow to form hopes.

V—World: Its Beauty and Happiness

⁹ O world, as God has made it! All is beauty:
And knowing this, is love, and love is duty.
What further may be sought for or declared?

ROBERT BROWNING, The Guardian-Angel.

However, you're a man, you've seen the world—
The beauty and the wonder and the power,
The shapes of things, their colours, lights and shades,
Changes, surprises—and God made it all!

ROBERT BROWNING, Fra Lippo Lippi, l. 276.

This world's no blot for us,
Nor blank; it means intensely, and means good:
To find its meaning is my meat and drink.

ROBERT BROWNING, Fra Lippo Lippi, l. 313.

¹⁰ I say the world is lovely
And that loveliness is enough.

ROBERT BUCHANAN, Artist and Model.

¹¹ The world is good in the lump.

GEORGE COLMAN THE YOUNGER, The Torrent.
Act i, sc. 2.

¹² Of this fair volume which we World do name,
If we the sheets and leaves could turn with care,

Of him who it corrects, and did it frame,
We clear might read the art and wisdom rare.
WILLIAM DEVEREAUX, The Book of the World.

Let the great book of the world be your serious study; read it over and over, get it by heart, adopt its style, and make it your own.

LOUIS CARROLL, Letters, 9 July, 1790.

For the world is not painted or adorned, but is from the beginning beautiful; and God has not made some beautiful things, but Beauty is the creator of the universe.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: The Poet.

I found many who were continually wishing for beauty. I went to them with a sunset and a spray of mist, but they had already contented themselves in a shop with little painted candlesticks.

CHARLOTTE HARDIN, Coins and Medals.

It is not accident that wherever we point the telescope we see beauty, that wherever we look with the microscope there we find beauty. It beats in through every nook and cranny of the mighty world.

R. M. JONES, (NEWTON, My Idea of God, p. 61.)

The world is not respectable; it is mortal, tormented, confused, deluded for ever; but is shot through with beauty, with love, with glints of courage and laughter; and in these the spirit blooms timidly, and struggles to the light among the thorns.

GEORGE SANTAYANA, Platonism and the Spiritual Life.

There's too much beauty upon this earth
For lonely men to bear.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE, Ballad of Too Much Beauty.

Oh, what a glory doth this world put on
For him who, with a fervent heart, goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed, and days well spent!
LONGFELLOW, Autumn, l. 30.

Glorious indeed is the world of God around us,
but more glorious the world of God within us.
There lies the Land of Song; there lies the poet's native land.

LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. i, ch. 8.

This world is full of beauty, as other worlds
above;

And, if we did our duty, it might be full of love.

GERALD MASSEY, This World Is Full of Beauty.

O world, I cannot hold thee close enough!

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY, God's World.

The world stands out on either side
No wider than the heart is wide;
Above the world is stretched the sky,—
No higher than the soul is high.

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY, Renaissance.

An idle poet, here and there
Looks round him, but for all the rest,
The world, unfathomably fair,
Is duller than a witling's jest.

COVENTRY PATMORE, The Revelation.

The world is full of poetry—the air
Is living with its spirit; and the waves

Dance to the music of its melodies.

J. G. PERCIVAL, The Prevalence of Poetry.

Great, wide, beautiful, wonderful World,
With the wonderful water round you curled,
And the wonderful grass upon your breast,
World, you are beautifully dressed.

W. B. RANDE, The Wonderful World.

The whole world is the temple of the immortal gods. (Totum mundum Deorum esse immortalium templum.)

SENECA, De Beneficiis. Bk. vii, sec. 7.

The world is such a happy place,
That children, whether big or small,
Should always have a smiling face,
And never, never sulk at all.

GABRIEL SIXTOUN, The World's Music.

The world is so full of a number of things,
I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings.

ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, Happy Thought.

The world was never less beautiful though viewed through a chink or knothole.

H. D. THORAU, Journal, 16 Jan., 1838.

I swear the earth shall surely be complete to him or her who shall be complete.

The earth remains jagged and broken only to him or her who remains jagged and broken.

WALT WHITMAN, Song of the Rolling Earth.
Pt. iii.

Not in Utopia, subterranean fields,
Or some secreted island, Heaven knows where!
But in the very world, which is the world
Of all of us,—the place where in the end
We find our happiness, or not at all!

This bad, twisted, topsy-turvy world,
Where all the heaviest wrongs get uppermost.

E. B. BROWNING, Anso's Leigh. Bk. v, l. 981.

This world has been harsh and strange;
Something is wrong: there needeth a change.

ROBERT BROWNING, Holy-Cross Day.

1 The world is naturally scarce
To all the truth it sees or hears,
But follows nonsense, and a lie,
With greediness and gluttony.

BOSWELL, Macbeth. Pt. III, canto 2, l. 805.

2 'Tis but a worthless world to win or lose.

BYRON, Childs Harold. Canto III, st. 40.

The world is full of strange vicissitudes.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto IV, st. 51.

Well, my deliberate opinion is—it's a jolly strange world.

ARNOLD BENNETT, The Tide. Act I.

3 Ah, World of ours, are you so grey

And weary, World, of spinning,

That you repeat the tales today

You told at the beginning?

For lo! the same old myths that made

The early "stage-successes,"

Still "hold the boards," and still are played,

"With new effects and dresses."

AUSTIN DOMMON, The Drama of the Doctor's Window.

4 Good-bye, proud world! I'm going home.

I am going to my own hearth-stone,

Becomed in you green hills alone,—

A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

EMERSON, Good-Bye.

5 For every workless thing is vain,

And ever go'th the wheel about. . . .

Now here, now there, now to, now fro,

Now up, now down, the world go'th so,

And ever hath done and ever shall.

JOHN GOWEN, Confessio Amantis: Prologue, l. 560.

So go'th the world; now woe, now weal.

JOHN GOWEN, Confessio Amantis. Bk. viii.

Well—well, the world must turn upon its axis,

And all mankind turn with it, heads or tails,

And live and die, make love and pay our taxes,

And as the veering wind shifts, shift our sails.

BYRON, Don Juan. Canto II, st. 4.

6 The world is with me, and its many cares,

Its woes—its wants—the anxious hopes and

leaves

That wait on all terrestrial affairs—

Heavens! what a wilderness the earth appears,

Where Youth and Death, and Health are out of date!

THOMAS, Henry, James.

7 We live together in a world that is bursting with sin and sorrow.

REYNOLD JENNINGS, Afterthoughts. Vol. I, p. 301.

The world's a very, very, very, very

And almost as dangerous

As the world's a very, very, very, very

Yes, Heaven is there, but the

Is a world of sweets and sour;
Our flowers are merely—flowers,
And the shadow of thy perfect bliss
Is the sunshine of ours.
EUGEN ALLAN POE, Iraja.

8 O what a chameleon world is this!

FRANCIS QUARLES, Emblems. Bk. I, No. 4.

O who would trust this world, or prize what's in

it,

That gives and takes, and chops and changes

every minute.

9 O how full of briars is this working-day world!

SHAKESPEARE, As You Like It. Act I, sc. 3, l. 12.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable,

Seem to me all the uses of this world!

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act I, sc. 2, l. 133.

Would I were dead! if God's good will were so:

For what is in this world but grief and woe?

SHAKESPEARE, III Henry VI. Act II, sc. 5, l. 19.

Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act III, sc. 2, l. 365.

The world is grown so bad,

That wrens make prey where eagles dare not perch.

SHAKESPEARE, Richard III. Act I, sc. 3, l. 70.

11 The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law;

The world affords no law to make thee rich;

Then be not poor, but break it.

SHAKESPEARE, Romeo and Juliet. Act V, sc. 1,

l. 72.

Ah, how the poor world is pestered with such waterflies, diminutives of nature.

SHAKESPEARE, Troilus and Cressida. Act V, sc.

1, l. 37.

A maniac world,

Homeless and sobbing through the deep she goes.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Unrest and Childhood.

13

Meseems the world is run quite out of square

From the first point of his appointed source;

And being once amiss grows daily worse and worse.

SWINBURNE, The Faerie Queene: Bk. v, Introduction.

St. 1.

14

Strange the world about me lies

Never yet familiar grown—

Still disturbs me with surprise,

Hunts me like a face half known.

In this house with starry dome,

Floored with gem-like plains and seas,

Shall I never feel at home?

Never whither be at ease?

WILLIAM WATSON, World-Singleness.

When the fearful

Unpredictable, and the fever of the world

Have hung upon the beatings of my heart.

Let not the cooings of the world allure thee:
Which of her lovers ever found her true?

YOUNG, Night Thoughts, Night viii, l. 1272.

VII—World: Knowledge Of, Worldliness

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

He sees that this great roundabout,
The world, with all its motley rout,

Church, army, physic, law,
Its customs and its businesses,

Is no concern at all of his,

And says—what says he?—Caw.

VINCENT BOURNE, The Jackdaw. (Cowper, tr.)

Worldly in this world,
I take and like its way of life.

ROBERT BROWNING, Bishop Blougram's Apology.

Of the world most worldly, who never compromised himself by an ungentlemanly action, and was never guilty of a manly one.

DICKENS, Barnaby Rudge, Ch. 25.

Such is the world. Understand it, despise it, love it; cheerfully hold on thy way through it, with thy eye on highest loadstars!

CARLYLE, Essays: Count Cagliostro.

The true Sovereign of the world, who moulds the world like soft wax, according to his pleasure, is he who lovingly sees into the world.

CARLYLE, Essays: Desak of Goethe.

Knowledge of the world is to be acquired only in the world, not in the closet.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 4 Oct., 1746.

The world is a country which no one yet ever knew by description; one must travel through it oneself to be acquainted with it. . . . Courts and camps are the only places to learn the world in.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 2 Oct., 1747.

The preposterous notions of a systematical man who does not know the world, tire the patience of a man who does.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 27 May, 1753.

The world is a lively place enough, in which we must accommodate ourselves to circumstances, sail with the stream as glibly as we can, be content to take froth for substance, the surface for the depth, the counterfeit for the real coin.

DICKENS, Barnaby Rudge, Ch. 12.

Map me no maps, etc., my head is a map, a map of the whole world.

SHAKESPEARE, Rape upon Rape, Act 1, sc. 5.

Geographers traced into the outer edges of their maps the parts of the world which they know nothing about, adding a note, "What lies beyond is empty desert full of wild beasts," or "hilled marsh," or "Scythian cold," or "frozen sea."

PLUTARCH, Lives: Themistocles, Ch. 1, sec. 1.

So geographers, in Afric maps,
With savage pictures fill their gaps,
And o'er uninhabitable downs
Place elephants for want of towns.

SWIFT, Poetry, a Rhapsody.

Unworldliness based on knowledge of the world is the finest thing on earth; but unworldliness based on ignorance of the world is less admirable.

DEAN W. R. INGE, (MARCHANT, Wis and Wisdom of Dean Inge, No. 172.)

To know the world is necessary, . . . and to know it early is convenient, if it be only that we may learn early to despise it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Idler, No. 80.

The world will, in the end, follow only those who have despised as well as served it.

SAMUEL BUTLER THE YOUNGER, Note-Books, p. 365.

That observation which is called knowledge of the world will be found much more frequently to make men cunning than good.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler, No. 4.

If there is one beast in all the loathsome fauna of civilization I hate and despise, it is a man of the world.

HENRY ARTHUR JONES, The Liers, Act 1.

Man of the World (for such wouldst thou be call'd)—

And art thou proud of that inglorious style?

YOUNG, Night Thoughts, Night viii, l. 8.

Long ago a man of the world was defined as a man who in every serious crisis is invariably wrong.

UNKNOWN, Armageddon—and After. (Fortnightly Review, Nov., 1914, p. 736.)

For to admire an' for to see,
For to behold this world so wide—

It never done no good to me,
But I can't drop it if I tried!

RUDYARD KIPPLING, "For to Admire."

A man may know the world without leaving his own home.

LAO-TZU, The Simple Way, No. 47.

If all the world must see the world!
As the world the world hath seen,
Then it were better for the world
That the world had never been.

SHAKESPEARE, King Lear. Act iii, sc. 4, l. 111.

You have too much respect upon the world:
They lose it that do buy it with much care.

SHAKESPEARE, The Merchant of Venice. Act i, sc. 1, l. 74.

The world is too much with us; late and soon,
Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers.

WORDSWORTH, Miscellaneous Sonnets. Pt. I, No. 33.

The world, well known, will give our hearts to Heaven,

Or make us demons, long before we die.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 379.

To know the world, not love her, is thy point
She gives but little, nor that little, long.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night viii, l. 1276.

Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?

SHAKESPEARE, Henry IV. Act ii, sc. 3, l. 43.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Steps on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait; then stops again,
Strikes his breast hard, and anon he casts
His eye against the moon.

SHAKESPEARE, Henry VIII. Act iii, sc. 2, l. 112.

'Gainst minor evils let him pray,
Who fortune's favour curries,—
For one that big misfortunes slay,

I—Writing: Definitions

4 Writing is not literature unless it gives to the reader a pleasure which arises not only from the things said, but from the way in which they are said

STOFFORD A. BROOKE, Primer of English Literature.

That writer does the most, who gives his reader the most knowledge, and takes from him the least time

C. C. COLTON, Lacon: Preface.

5 Certainly the Age of Writing is the most miraculous of all things man has devised.

CARLYLE, On Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Man of Letters.

With the art of Writing, of which Printing is a simple, an inevitable and comparatively insignificant corollary, the true reign of miracles for mankind commenced.

CARLYLE, On Heroes and Hero-Worship: The Hero as Man of Letters.

6 Miscellanists are the most popular writers among every people; for it is they who form a communication between the learned and the unlearned, and, as it were, throw a bridge between those two great divisions of the public.

ISAAC D'ISRAELI, Literary Character of Men of Genius: Miscellanists.

There are two things which I am confident I can do very well. One is an introduction to any literary work, stating what it is to contain, and how it should be executed in the most perfect manner.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, 1775.)

7 All writing comes by the grace of God.
EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Experience.

No man can write anything who does not think that what he writes is, for the times, the history of the world.

EMERSON, Essays, Second Series: Nature.

The nobler the truth or sentiment, the less imports the question of authorship.

EMERSON, Letters and Social Aims: Quotation and Originality.

8 All great men have written proudly, not cared to explain. They knew that the intelligent reader would come at last, and would thank them.

EMERSON, Natural History of Intellect: Thoughts on Modern Literature.

9 Composition is, for the most part, an effort of slow diligence and steady perseverance, to which the mind is dragged by necessity or resolution.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Adventurer. No. 138.

To write and to live are very different. Many who praise virtue do no more than praise it.

JOHNSON, Works Vol III, p. 83 (Hawkins, ed.)

10 If the works of the great poets teach anything, it is to hold mere invention somewhat cheap. It is not the finding of a thing, but the making something out of it after it is found, that is of consequence.

J. R. LOWELL, My Study Windows: Chaucer.

11 The art of the pen is to rouse the inward vision. . . . That is why the poets, who spring imagination with a word or a phrase, paint lasting pictures.

GEORGE MEREDITH, Diana of the Crossways. Ch. 15.

II—Writing: Apophthegms

12 With pen and with pencil we're learning to say

Nothing, more cleverly, every day.

WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, Blackberries.

13 The reason why so few good books are written, is that so few people who can write know anything.

BAGEHOT, Literary Studies: Shakespeare.

14 The very dust of whose writings is gold.

RICHARD BENTLEY, On Phalaris. Referring to Bishop Pearson.

15 And tell prose writers, stories are no state,
That penny ballads have a better sale.

NICHOLAS BRETTON, Pasquill. (1600)

16 In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaister of the wall of the king's palace. . . . And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN.

(The Testament: Daniel, v. 1, 23: History: Writing on the wall.)

1 When I want to read a book I write one.
BENJAMIN DISRAELI, Remark. Attributed to him in Blackwood's review of Lottair.

2 The lover of letters loves power too.
EMERSON, Society and Solitude: Clubs.

3 Write with the learned, pronounce with the vulgar.

FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738. See 1993:12

Write disagreeably, if you like; as the man said of the rack, it will help me to pass an hour or two, at any rate.

MADAME DU DEFFAND, Letters.

4 Written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond.

Old Testament: Jeremiah, xvii, 1.

5 Oh that . . . mine adversary had written a book.

Old Testament: Job, xxxi, 35.

6 What I have written I have written.

New Testament: John, xix, 22. (Quod scripsit, scripsit.—Vulgate.) Pilate's reply to the priest who protested against the title, "Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews," which he had written and placed upon the cross.

7 A man may write at any time if he set himself doggedly to it.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, 1773.)

8 No man but a blockhead ever wrote except for money.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, 1776.)

As soon as any art is pursued with a view to money, then farewell, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, all hope of genuine good work.

SAMUEL BUTLER THE YOUNGER, Note-Books, p. 171.

A man starts upon a sudden, takes Pen, Ink, and Paper, and without ever having had a thought of it before, resolves within himself he will write a Book; he has no Talent at Writing, but he wants fifty Guineas.

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères Ch. 15.

The impulse to create beauty is rather rare in literary men. . . . Far ahead of it comes the yearning to make money. And after the yearning to make money comes the yearning to make a noise.

H. L. MENCKEN, Prejudices. Ser v, p. 189.

9 No great work, or worthy of praise or memory, but came out of poor cradles.

BEN JOHNSON, Epigrams: De Bonis et Malis.

10 Our literary masonry, nowadays, is well done, but our architecture is poor. (Our literature, aujourd'hui, on fait bien la maçonnerie, mais on fait mal l'architecture.)

JOYCE, Psalms. No. 276.

11 Damn the age; I will write for antiquity.
CHARLES LAMB. (JERMOUD, Bon Mots by Charles Lamb.)

12 He was the author, our hand finished it. (Invenit ille, nostra perfect manus.)

PHÆDRUS, Fables. Bk. vi, l. 20

Washington's Farewell Address was written by Alexander Hamilton. Andrew Jackson's famous proclamation on nullification, when South Carolina threatened to secede, was written by Edward Livingston. As a rule, however, Presidents have employed "ghost writers" only on the endless list of routine speeches their hard lot forced them to make. No President ever used this device to such a great extent as Coolidge.

CHARLES WILLIS THOMPSON, Presidents I've Known, p. 380.

13 I think this piece will help to boil thy pot.

JOHN WOLCOT, The Bard Complimenteth Mr West on His "Lord Nelson" (c. 1790) The first recorded use of "pot-boiler" in this particular sense, though Sir Roger L'Estrange, in 1692, remarked in his Fables of Æsop, p. 305, that "Money makes the pot boil."

To employ them, as a literary man is always tempted, to keep the domestic pot a boiling.

J. R. LOWELL, My Study Windows, p. 139.

14 A dedication is a wooden leg.

YOUNG, Love of Fame. Sat. iv, l. 192.

Presumption or meanness are both too often the only articles to be found in a preface.

GEORGE CRABBE, Inebriety: Preface

III—Writing: The Matter

15 Write to the mind and heart, and let the ear glean after what it can.

P. J. BAILEY, Festus: Home.

What comes from the heart goes to the heart.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Table-Talk. Of composition.

He that writes to himself writes to an eternal public.

EMERSON, Essays, First Series: Spiritual Laws.

16 'Tis mean for empty praise of wit to write, As foppings grin to show their teeth are white.

JOHN BROWN, Essay on Satire. St. 2.

17 Not pickt from the leaves of any Author, but bred amongst the weeds and tares of mine own brain.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE, Religio Medici. Pt. i, 36.

Some bold translations not unlike to be The wrong side of a Turkey tapestry.

JAMES HOWE, Familiar Letters. Bk. I, sec. 6, l. 27.

The greatest part of a writer's time is spent in reading, in order to write; a man will turn over half a library to make one book.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, 1773.)

What boots all your grist? it can never be ground
Till a breeze makes the arms of the windmill go round.

J. R. LOWELL, A Fable for Critics, l. 83.

Let these describe the undescribable.

BYRON, Childs Harold. Canto iv, st. 53.

You praise the firm restraint with which they write—

I'm with you there, of course:

They use the snaffle and the curb all right,

But where's the bloody horse?

ROY CAMPBELL, Adamastor: Or Some South African Novels

Choose a subject, ye who write, suited to your strength. (Sumite materiam vestris, qui scribitis, equam Viribus.)

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 38

Dear authors! suit your topics to your strength,
And ponder well your subject and its length,
Nor lift your load, before you're quite aware
What weight your shoulders will, or will not,
bear.

BYRON, Hints from Horace, l. 59.

Notes are often necessary, but they are necessary evils.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Shakespeare: Preface.

O thou sculptor, painter, poet!

Take this lesson to thy heart:

That is best which lieth nearest;

Shape from that thy work of art.

LONGFELLOW, Gaspard Becerra. St. 7.

It may be glorious to write

Thoughts that will glad the two or three High souls, like those far stars that come in sight

Once in a century;—

But better far it is to speak

One simple word, which now and then

Shall waken their free natures in the weak
And friendless sons of men.

J. R. LOWELL, An Incident in a Railroad Car.
St. 19.

Thou art the cause, O reader, that I write on lighter topics, when I would prefer serious ones. (Seria cum possim, quod delectantia malim scribere, tu causa es lector.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. v, epig. 16, l. 1.

Authors hear at length one general cry,
Tickle and entertain us, or we die!

COWPER, Retirement, l. 707.

To write upon all is an author's sole chance
For attaining, at last, the least knowledge of any.

THOMAS MOORE, Literary Advertisement, l. 35.

There is no such thing as a dirty theme. There are only dirty writers.

G. J. NATHAN, Testament of a Critic, p. 179.

I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind.
SHAKESPEARE, Henry VI. Act v, sc. 3, l. 66.

Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless
in my throes,

Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite:

Fool! said my Muse to me, look in thy heart,
and write.

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, Astrophel and Stella. Sonnet 1.

Look, then, into thine heart and write.

LONGFELLOW, Voices of the Night: Prelude.
St. 19.

Authors—essayist, atheist, novelist, realist, rhymester, play your part,
Paint the mortal shame of nature with the living hues of art.

l. 139.

IV—Writing: The Manner

See also Style; Words: Their Use

Thus I set pen to paper with delight,
And quickly had my thoughts in black and white.

For having now my method by the end,

Still as I pull'd it came; and so I penn'd

It down, until at last it came to be

For length and breadth the bigness which you see.

JOHN BUNYAN, The Pilgrim's Progress: The Author's Apology for His Book

Honest John [Bunyan] was the first that I know of who mixed narration and dialogue; a method of writing very engaging to the reader.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Autobiography. Ch. 1.

How doth it make judicious readers smile,

When authors are detected by their style!

Though every one, who knows this author,
knows

He shifts his style much oftener than his clothes.

CHARLES CHURCHILL, The Apology, l. 140.

So that the jest is clearly to be seen,
Not in the words—but in the gap between:

Manner is all in all, whatever is writ,

The substitute for genius, sense, and wit.

COWPER, Fable Talk, l. 340.

Though such continual zigzags in a book,

Such drunken readings, have an awkward look.

COWPER, Conversations, l. 861. Condemning digressions.

By my rambling digressions I perceive myself to be grown old. I used to write more method-ically. But one does not dress for private company as for a public hall.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Autobiography. Ch. 1.

1 The ablest writer is a gardener first, and then a cook. His tasks are, carefully to select and cultivate his strongest and most nutritive thoughts, and, when they are ripe, to dress them wholesomely, and so that they may have a relish.

J. C. AND A. W. HARR, Guesses at Truth.

2 And since, I never dare to write
As funny as I can.

O. W. HOLMES, The Height of the Ridiculous.

I can't write what I feel: I'm coarse, when terse.

3 Do not seek to render word for word, like a slavish translator. (Nec verbo verbum curabis reddere fidem Interpres.)
HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 133.

4 Nothing is ended with honour which does not conclude better than it began.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler. No. 207.

5 Nothing is fashionable till it be deformed, and this is to write like a gentleman.

BEN JOHNSON, Explorata: De Vere Argutis.

6 In creating, the only hard thing's to begin;
A grass-blade's no easier to make than an oak;

If you've once found the way, you've achieved the grand stroke.

J. R. LOWELL, A Fable for Critics, l. 534.

The last thing one settles in writing a book is what one should put in first.

PASCAL, Pensées. Sec. i, No. 19.

7 Make 'em laugh; make 'em cry; make 'em wait.

CHARLES READE, Recipe for a Successful Novel.

8 It is ignoble to say one thing and mean another; how much more so to write one thing and mean another! (Turpe est aliud loqui, aliud sentire; quanto turpius aliud scribere, aliud sentire!)

SENeca, Epistula ad Luciliam. Epis. xxiv, 19.

V—Writing: Good and Bad

9 This writing seemeth to me . . . not much better than that noise or sound which musicians make while they are in tuning their instruments; which is nothing pleasant to hear, but yet is a cause why the music is sweeter afterwards.

BACON, Advancement of Learning. Bk. II.

10 It is scarcely possible for authors to be admired and at the same time to excel.

FRANCIS BACON, De Augmentis Scientiarum: Prefatio.

He who pleases many must have some species of merit.

JOHNSON, Works, II, 279. (Hawkins, ed.)

So must the writer, whose productions should take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould.

13 People do not deserve to have good writing, they are so pleased with bad.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vi, p. 132.

It is very hard to go beyond your public. If they are satisfied with your poor performance, you will not easily make it better.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. ix, p. 304.

14 Good writing is a kind of skating which carries off the performer where he would not go.

EMERSON, Journals. Vol. vii, p. 334.

15 If you wish to be a good writer, write. ("Ἄν τις γραφικός εἶναι, γράφει.")

EPICETUS, Discourses. Bk. II, ch. 18, sec. 1.

Scribendo discas scribere. [By writing you learn to write.] It is only by writing ill that you can attain to write well.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, (BOSWELL, Life, 16 Apr., 1763)

Write something great. (Scribe aliquid magnum.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams. Bk. I, ep. 107, l. 2.

16 Let us beware of writing too well; it is the worst possible manner of writing.

18 The Dean could write finely upon a broomstick.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Life of Swift. When someone remarked that Vanessa must be an extraordinary woman to inspire Dean Swift to write so finely upon her.

19 It is the glory and merit of some men to write well, and of others not to write at all.

LA BRUYÈRE, Les Caractères. Ch. 1.

1 Whatever hath been written shall remain,
Nor be erased nor written o'er again;
The unwritten only still belongs to thee:
Take heed, and ponder well what that shall be.

9 Let him be kept from paper, pen, and ink;
So may he cease to write, and learn to think.
MATTHEW PRIOR, To a Person Who Wrote Ill.

You, for example, clever to a fault,
The rough and ready man, who write apace,
Read somewhat seldomer, think perhaps even less.

ROBERT BROWNING, Bishop Blougram's Apology.
Two sorts of writers possess genius: those who think, and those who cause others to think.
ROUX, Meditations of a Parish Priest: Literature: Poets. No. 16.

So in the way of writing without thinking,
Thou hast a strange alacrity in sinking.
CHARLES SACKVILLE, EARL OF DORSET, *To Mr.
Edward Howard*.

You may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking.
SHAKESPEARE, Merry Wives of Windsor, III, 5, 12.

10 This dull product of a scoffer's pen.
WORDSWORTH, The Excursion. Bk. II, l. 484.

VI—Writing: Easy Writing

11 Whate'er is well-conceived is clearly said,
And the words to say it flow with ease.
(Ce que l'on conçoit bien s'énonce clairement, Et les mots pour le dire arrivent aisément.)
BOILEAU, L'Art Poétique. Pt. I, l. 153.

12 True ease in writing comes from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
'T is not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense.
Soft is the strain when zephyr gently blows,
And the smooth stream in smoother numbers flows;

But when loud surges lash the sounding shore,
The hoarse rough verse should like the torrent roar.

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw.

The line, too, labours, and the words move slow:
Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main.

The Mob of Gentlemen who wrote with Ease.
POPE, Imitations of Horace: Epistles, II, 1, 108.

1 The book that he has made renders its author this service in return, that so long as the book survives, its author remains immortal and cannot die.

RICHARD DE BURY, Philobiblon. Ch. i, sec. 21.

2 Thou too hast built what will outlast all marble and metal, and be a wonder-bringing City of the mind, a Temple and Seminary, and Prophetic Mount, whereto all kindreds of the earth will pilgrim.

CARLYLE, Sartor Resartus. Bk. ii, ch. 8.

3 If you would not be forgotten, as soon as you are dead and rotten, either write things worth reading, or do things worth the writing.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1738.

4 Wide as the light extends shall be the fame Of this great work.

(Τὸ δ' αὖτο κλῆος ἔσται βουρ τ' ἀπικλῆσται φῆς.)

I have a great work in hand. (Habeo opus magnum in manibus.)

CICERO, Academicarum Questionum, i, 1, 2.

And now I have completed a work which neither the wrath of Jove, nor fire, nor sword, nor devouring age, will have power to destroy. (Jamque opus exegi, quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignis, Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetustas.)

OVID, Metamorphoses. Bk. xv, l. 871.

O what an endless work have I in hand!

SHAKESPEARE, For the Queen. Bk. iv, canto xii, st. 1.

5 He that cometh in print because he would be known, is like the fool that cometh into the Market because he would be seen.

LYLY, Euphues: To the Gentlemen Readers.

6 By labour and intense study (which I take to be my portion in this life) joined with the strong propensity of nature, I might perhaps leave something so written to after-times, as they should not willingly let it die.

JOHN MILTON, Reason of Church Government. Bk. ii, Introduction.

7 Writing endures the years; it is through writing that you know Agamemnon, and all those who fought with or against him. (Scripta ferunt annos; scriptis Agamemnona nosti, Et quisquis contra vel simul arma tulit.)

9 Literary fame is the only fame of which a sage-man ought to be ambitious, because it is the only lasting and living fame.

ROBERT BODLEY, Pomona, Life of Laud. Bk. vii, ch. 13.)

I would rather be Charles Lamb than Charles XII. I would rather be remembered by a song than by a victory. I would rather build a fine sonnet than have built St. Paul's. . . . Fine phrases I value more than bank-notes. I have ear for no other harmony than the harmony of words.

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp: Men of Letters.

10 I grant the man is vain who writes for praise. Praise no man e'er deserved, who sought no more.

YOUNG, Night Thoughts. Night v, l. 3.

X—Writing: The Writer

11 The circumstance which gives authors an advantage above all these great masters, is this, that they can multiply their originals; or rather, can make copies of their works, to what number they please, which shall be as valuable as the originals themselves.

ADAMSON, The Spectator. No. 166.

12 Writers, like teeth, are divided into incisors and grinders.

WALTER BAGEHOT, Literary Studies: The First Edinburgh Reviewers.

13 There is probably no hell for authors in the next world—they suffer so much from critics and publishers in this.

C. N. BOVER, Summaries of Thought: Authors.

13a One hates an author that's all author, fellows In foolscap uniforms turn'd up with ink,

So very anxious, clever, fine, and jealous,

One don't know what to say to them, or think, Unless to puff them with a pair of bellows.

BYRON, Beppo. St. 75.

14 That unspeakable shoeblack-seraph Army of Authors.

CARLYLE, Essays: Boswell's Johnson.

He, with his copy-rights and copy-wrongs, in his squalid garret, in his rusty coat; ruling (for this is what he does), from his grave, after death, whole nations and generations who would, or would not, give him bread while living,—in a rather curbed spectacle!

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship. Lect. v.

15 There are genuine Men of Letters, and not genuine; as in every kind there is a genuine and spurious. . . . The Hero as Man of Letters will be found discharging a function for us which is ever honourable, ever the highest; and was once well known to be the highest. He is uttering forth, in such way as he has, the inspired soul of him; all that a man, in any case, can do.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship. Lect. v.

Men of Letters are a perpetual Priesthood, from age to age, teaching all men that a God is still present in their life. . . . In the true literary Man there is thus ever, acknowledged or not by the world, a sacredness: he is the light of the world; the world's Priest;—guiding it, like a sacred Pillar of Fire, in its dark pilgrimage through the waste of Time.

CARLYLE, Heroes and Hero-Worship. Lect. v. Literary men are . . . a perpetual priesthood.

CARLYLE, Essays: Richter.

1 Until you understand a writer's ignorance, presume yourself ignorant of his understanding.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Biographia Literaria. Ch. 12. If you once understand an author's character, the comprehension of his writings becomes easy.

LONGFELLOW, Hyperion. Bk. I, ch. 5.

2 It is a hard and nice thing for a man to write of himself. It grates his own heart to say anything of disparagement, and the reader's ears to hear anything of praise from him.

ABRAHAM COWLEY, Of Myself.

The author who speaks about his own books is almost as bad as the mother who talks about her own children

DISRAELI, Speech, 19 Nov., 1870.

But every little busy scribbler now Swells with the praises which he gives himself; And, taking sanctuary in the crowd, Brags of his impudence, and scorns to mend.

HORACE, Ars Poetica, l. 475. (Dillon, tr.)

3 A man of letters, and of manners too! COWPER, The Task. Bk. ii, l. 782.

4 How strange that men, Who guide the plough, should fail to guide the pen.

GEORGE CRABBE, The Parish Register. Pt. ii.

5 Choose an author as you choose a friend. WENTWORTH DILON, Essay on Translated Verse, l. 96

6 'Tis a vanity common to all writers, to over-value their own productions.

DRYDEN, Examen Poeticum: Dedication.

7 The writer, like the priest, must be exempted from secular labor. His work needs a frolic health; he must be at the top of his condition.

EMERSON, Poetry and Imagination: Creation. Talent alone cannot make a writer. There must be a man behind the book.

EMERSON, Representative Men: Goethe.

8 An affected modesty is very often the greatest vanity, and authors are sometimes prouder of their blushes than of the praises that occasioned them.

FARQUHAR, The Constant Couple: Preface.

Nothing gives an author so much pleasure as to find his works respectfully quoted by other learned authors.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Poor Richard, 1758.

I never saw an author in my life, saving perhaps one, that did not purr as audibly as a full-grown domestic cat on having his fur smoothed the right way by a skilful hand.

O. W. HOLMES, The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table. Ch. 3.

There is nothing more dreadful to an author than neglect, compared with which reproach, hatred and opposition are names of happiness.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler. No. 2.

9 No author ever spar'd a brother.

JOHN GAY, Fables: The Elephant and the Bookeller.

10 Whatever an author puts between the two covers of his book is public property; whatever of himself he does not put there is his private property, as much as if he had never written a word.

GAIL HAMILTON, Country Living and Country Thinking: Preface.

11 I don't want to be a doctor, and live by men's diseases; nor a minister to live by their sins; nor a lawyer to live by their quarrels. So I don't see there's anything left for me but to be an author.

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE, Remark to His Mother.

12 The only happy author in this world is he who is below the care of reputation.

WASHINGTON IRVING, Tales of a Traveller: Poor-Devil Author.

13 The chief glory of every people arises from its authors.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Dictionary of the English Language: Preface.

To commence author is to claim praise.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, The Rambler. No. 93.

Modern writers are the moons of literature; they shine with reflected light, with light borrowed from the ancients.

SAMUEL JOHNSON. (BOSWELL, Life, III, 333.)

15 I never desire to converse with a man who has written more than he has read.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, Miscellanies. Vol II, p. 6.

16 He is the richest author that ever grazed the common of literature.

SAMUEL JOHNSON, of Dr. Thomas Campbell. (WHARTON, Life.)

17 There are two literary maladies—writer's cramp and swelled head. The worst of writer's cramp is that it is never cured; the worst of swelled head is that it never kills.

COULSON KERNHAM, Lecture, Birmingham.

18 A writer owned an asterisk,

And kept it in his Den,

Where he wrote tales (which had large sales)

Of frail and erring men;

And always, when he reached the point,

When copping Censors lurk,

He called upon the Asterisk

To do his dirty work.

STODOLAR KING, The Writer and the Asterisk.

1 Skilled equally with voice and pen
To stir the hearts or mould the minds of men.
J. R. LOWELL, Epistle to G. W. Curtis, l. 12.

2 But I became a writer all the same, and shall remain one until the end of the chapter, just as a cow goes on giving milk all her life, even though what appears to be her self-interest urges her to give gin.

PETRONIUS ARBITER, Satyricon. Sec. 83.

6 Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old;
It is the rust we value, not the gold.
Chaucer's worst ribaldry is learn'd by rote,
And beastly skelton heads of houses quote;
One likes no language but the Faery Queen;
A Scot will fight for Christ's Kirk o' the Green;
And each true Briton is to Ben so civil,
He swears the Muses met him at the Devil.

GEORGE BOWEN, The Bible in Spain. Ch. 1.

13 To him no author was unknown,
Yet what he wrote was all his own. . . .

Horace's wit and Virgil's state

He did not steal, but emulate;

And when he would like them appear,

Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear.

XI--Writing: Handwriting

Every man, who has the use of his eyes and of his right hand, can write whatever hand he pleases.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 9 July, 1750.

He can't write, nor read writing from his cradle, place your honour; but he can make his mark equal to another, sir.

MARIA EDGEWORTH, Loves and Laws Act III, sc. 1.

Phœnicia first, if fame be truly heard,
Fixed in rude characters the fleeting word.

(Phœnicia primi, famæ si creditur, auri Mansuram rudibus vocem signare figuris.)

LUCAN, De Bello Civili. Bk. iii, l. 220. (King, tr.)

Cadmus brought the twenty-two or twenty-four Phœnician letters to Greece. They are called "the black daughters of Cadmus."

EMERSON, Uncollected Lectures: Public and Private Education. The ancient tradition was that Cadmus brought sixteen letters from Phœnicia to Greece, to which Palamedes subsequently added four more, and Simonides, still later, four others.

Thence comes to us that ingenious art
Of painting words and speaking to the eyes;
And by the differing form of figures traced,
To give color and form to thought.

(C'est de lui que nous vient cet art ingénieux
De peindre la parole et de parler aux yeux;
Et par les traits divers de figures tracées,
Donner de la couleur et du corps aux pensées.)

BRÉHÉLUS, Paraphrase of Lucan.

The swifter hand doth the swift words outrun:
Before the tongue hath spoke, the hand hath done.

(Currant verba licet, manus est velocior illis:
Non dum lingua summa, dextra peregit opus.)

MARTIAL, Epigrams: On a Short-hand Writer. Bk. xiv, epig. 208. (Wright, tr.)

I wish that I had never learned to write!

EMPEROR NERO, on being asked to sign his first writ for the execution of a malefactor.
(SUETONIUS, Twelve Cæsars: Nero. Sec. 10.)

Write it down in a good firm hand, (Scrives vide phrase et probe.)

PLAUTUS, Amphitruo, l. 725. (Act iv, sc. 1.)

Men of quality are in the wrong to under-value, as they often do, the practise of a fair and quick hand in writing; for it is no immaterial accomplishment. (Non sedit aliena res, quæ fere ab honestis negligi solet, cura bene ac velociter scribendi.)

QUINTILIAN, De Institutione Oratoria. Bk. I, ch. 5.

I once did hold it, as our statists do,
A baseness to write fair, and labour'd much
How to forget that learning, but, sir, now
It did me yeoman's service.

SHAKESPEARE, Hamlet. Act v, sc. 2, l. 33.

If you give me six lines written by the hand of the most honest of men, I will find something in them which will hang him. (Qu'on me donne six lignes écrites de la main du plus honnête homme, j'y trouverai de quoi le faire pendre.)

And leaves our sphere behind.

The good Old Year is with the past,

O be the New as kind!

BRYANT, A Song for New-Year's Eve.

15 The merry year is born
Like the bright berry from the naked thorn.

HARTLEY COLERIDGE, New Year's Day.

16 A song for the Old, while its knell is tolled,
And its parting mementos fly!

But a song and a cheer for the glad New Year,
While we watch the Old Year die!

Oh! its grief and pain ne'er can come again,
And its care lies buried deep;

But what joy untold doth the New Year hold,
And what hopes within it sleep!

GEORGE COOPER, The New Year.

17 Who comes dancing over the snow,

His soft little feet all bare and rosy?

Open the door, though the wild winds blow,

Take the child in and make him cosy.

Take him in and hold him dear,

He is the wonderful glad New Year
 — BROAD MAMA WOLOK CHALK, The New Year

New Year comes but once a twelvemonth.
 W E HENLEY, In Hospital Interlude

For hark! the last chime of the dial has ceased,
 And Old Time who his leisure to euse,
 Has finish'd the Months, like the flocks at a feast,

Is preparing to tap a fresh dozen!
 HOOD, Anacreontic for the New Year St 1.

And ye, who have met with Adversity's blast,
 And been bow'd to the earth by its fury,
 To whom the Twelve Months, that have recently pass'd

 Were as harsh as a prebendary's—
 Still, fill to the Future! and join in our chime,
 The regrets of remembrance to cozen,
 And having obtained a New Trial of Time,
 Shout in hopes of a hundred dozen
 HOOD, Anacreontic for the New Year St 3

Sad, sad to think that the year is all but done
 CHARLES KINGSLEY, The Starlings

Then sing, young hearts that are full of cheer,
 With never a thought of sorrow,
 The old goes out, but the glad young year
 Comes merrily in to-morrow
 RABBIT HUNTERSTON MILLER, New Year Song

Gone! gone forever!—like a rushing wave
 Another year has burst upon the shore
 Of earthly being—and its last low tones,
 Wandering in broken accents in the air,
 Are dying to an echo
 GEORGE D. FARRAGE, Flight of Years

Like yonder stars so bright and clear
 That praise their Maker as they move,
 And usher in the coming year
 SCHILLER, Song of the Bell (Bowring, tr.)

"Orphan Hours, the Year is dead
 Come and sigh, come and weep"
 "Merry Hours, smile instead,
 For the Year is but asleep
 See, it smiles as it is sleeping,
 Mocking your untimely weeping"
 SHELLEY, Dance for the Year

The warm suns falling, the bleak wind is wailing,
 The bare boughs are sighing, the pale flowers are dying.

And the year
 On the earth has despatched, in a shroud of leaves

is lying.
 Come, moonlight, rain, and wind,
 From November to May.

In your midst, and in your midst,
 In your midst, and in your midst,
 In your midst, and in your midst,
 In your midst, and in your midst,

And the year has despatched, in a shroud of leaves
 is lying.

Full knee-deep lies the winter snow,
 And the winter winds are wearily sighing,
 Told ya the church-bell sad and slow,
 And tread softly and speak low,
 For the old year lies a-dying

There's a new foot on the floor, my friend,
 And a new face at the door, my friend,
 A new face at the door
 TENNYSON, The Death of the Old Year.

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
 The flying cloud, the frosty light
 The year is dying in the night,
 Ring out, wild bells, and let him go,
 TENNYSON, In Memoriam Pt cvi, st 1

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
 Ring, happy bells, across the snow
 The year is going, let him go,
 Ring out the false, ring in the true
 ALFRED TENNYSON, In Memoriam Pt cvi, st 2

A spirit haunts the year's last hours
 Dwelling amid these yellowing bowers

YOUTH

See also Age and Youth; Boy; Girl

I.—Youth: Definitions

A man that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time; but that happeneth rarely.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

Young men are fitter to invent than to judge;
 fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, stir more than they can quiet, fly to the end without consideration of the means.

FRANCIS BACON, Essays: Of Youth and Age.

Youth being indeed the philosopher's rassa tabula, is apt to receive any impressure.

RICHARD BRATHWAITE, English Gentleman, 3
 (1630)

Every street has two sides, the shady side and the sunny. When two men shake hands and part, mark which of the two takes the sunny side; he will be the younger man of the two

BULWER-LYTTON, What Will He Do With It?
 Bk. II, ch. 15

Youth is to all the glad season of life; but often only by what it hopes, not by what it attains, or what it escapes.

CARLYLE, Essays: Schiller.

The young leading the young, is like the blind leading the blind; they will both fall into the ditch.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 6 Nov., 1747.

Young men are apt to think themselves wise enough, as drunken men are apt to think themselves sober enough.

LORD CHESTERFIELD, Letters, 15 Jan., 1753.

The best recommendation that a young man can have is modesty, filial affection, and devotion to kindred. (Prima igitur commendatio prescribitur a modestia cum pietate im-paretur, in suis beneficiis.)

CICERO, De Officiis. Bk. II, ch. 13, sec. 46.

Young hands are giddy, and young hearts are warm,

And make mistakes for manhood to reform.
 Baysate, at best, but pretty boys mablewn,

Whose scent and hues are rather-guess'd than known;

Each dreams that each is just what he appears,

But learns his error in maturer years,
 When disposition, like a sail unfurl'd,
 Shows all its rents and patches to the world.
 COWPER, Two Children, l. 444.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;

We may our ends by our beginnings know.

SIR JOHN DRYDEN, On Prudence, l. 225.

The Youth of a Nation are the trustees of Posterity.

BENJAMIN DIBBELL, Sybil. Bk. vi, ch. 13.

"And youth is cruel, and has no remorse
 And smiles at situations which it cannot see."
 I smile, of course,

And go on drinking tea.
 T. S. ELIOT, Portrait of a Lady.

Say, was it never heard
 That wisdom might in youth be gotten,
 Or wit be ripe before 'twas rotten?

EMERSON, Fame

There is a feeling of Eternity in youth which makes us amends for everything. To be young is to be as one of the Immortals.

WILLIAM HAKLITT, Table Talk: The Feeling of Immortality in Youth.

Youth is a continual intoxication; it is the fever of reason. (La jeunesse est une ivresse continuelle: c'est la fièvre de la raison.)

LA ROCHEFOUCAULD, Maximes. No. 271.

Youth sees too far to see how near it is
 To seeing farther.

E. A. ROBINSON, Tristram.

Our youth is like a rustic at the play
 That cries aloud in simple-hearted fear,
 Curses the villain, shudders at the fray,
 And weeps before the maiden's wretched bier

GEORGE SANTAYANA, The Rustic at the Play.

Youth is wholly experimental.

R. L. STEVENSON, A Letter to a Young Gentleman.

Youth is the time to go flashing from one end of the world to the other both in mind and body;
 to try the manners of different nations; to heat
 the chimæ at midnight.

R. L. STEVENSON, *Virginibus Puerisque:
 Crabbed Age and Youth*.

Youth is not a time of life; it is a state of mind.

SERGEY DUBOVS, From the Journals of Four Score Years.

1 O enviable, early days,
When dancing thoughtless pleasure's mass,
To ease, to quit unknown!

How ill exchange'd for tiger times,
To feel the follies or the crimes,
Of others, or my own!

BURNS, Despondency St. 5.

O life! how pleasant is thy morning,
Young Fancy's rays the hills adorning!
Cold-pausing Caution's lesson scorn.

We frisk away,
Like schoolboys at th' expected warning,
To joy and play
BURNS, Epistle to James Smith St. 15.

Oh, talk not to me of a name great in story;
The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty.

BROWN, Stanzas Written on the Road Between Florence and Pisa.

2 In life's morning march, when my bosom was young

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Soldier's Dream, l. 14

There is no time like the old time, when you and I were young

O W HOLMES, No Time Like the Old Time.

3 Nought cared this body for wind or weather
When Youth and I lived in 't together.

S. T. COLERIDGE, Youth and Age, l. 16.

4 Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth.

Old Testament: Psalm, xi, 9.

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth,
while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh,
when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them.

Old Testament: Ecclesiastes, xii, 1.

5 Ah, sweet is youth! ('A veiras me' adov.)

EURIPIDES, Hercules Epuratus, l. 637.

Ah youth! for ever dear, for ever kind!

BURNS, The Bard, l. 503 (Pope, tr.).

6 Youth! youth! how buoyant are thy hopes!
they turn,

Like marginals, toward the sunny side.

JOHN LOCKE, The Four Bridges, St. 56.

How beautiful is youth! how bright it gleams
With its illusions, aspirations, dreams!

Book of Beginnings, Story without End,
Each reader's dream; and each with added!

All possibilities are in its hands,
No danger daunts it, and no foe withstands;

In its sublime audacity and faith, I see it
"Be thou removed!" like the automatic scale.

And with ambitious feet, heavenward it goes,
Ascends the ladder leaning on the cross.

LONGFELLOW, Merwin's Sonnet, l. 56.

7 Youth! in thy morning, when my bosom was young

THOMAS CAMPBELL, The Soldier's Dream, l. 14

"A boy's will is the wind's will,
And the thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts."

LONGFELLOW, My Lost Youth St. 1.

8 When nature pleased, for life itself was new,
And the heart promised what the fancy drew.
SHAKESPEARE, Pleasures of Memory, Pt. i, l. 19.

9 I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accoutered like young men,

I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace,
And speak between the change of man and boy,

With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth

SHAKESPEARE, Merchant of Venice, iii, 4, 62.

10 I must laugh and dance and sing,
Youth is such a lovely thing

ALINE THOMAS, A Song of Youth.

11 Bliss was it in that dawn to be alive,
But to be young was very Heaven!

WORDSWORTH, The Prelude Bk. xi, l. 108.

There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,
The earth, and every common sight,

To me did seem

Appareled in celestial light,

The glory and the freshness of a dream

WORDSWORTH, Intimations of Immortality St. 4

The Youth, who daily farther from the East
Must travel, still is Nature's Priest,

And by the vision splendid

Is on his way attended.

WORDSWORTH, Intimations of Immortality St. 5.

13 Our youth we can have but to-day;
We may always find time to grow old
BISHOP GEORGE BAKKLEY, Can Love Be Controlled by Adversity

14 'T is not on youth's smooth cheek the blush

(Teneris heu lubrica moribus aetas)

CLAYTON, De Bello Germanico, Bk. viii, l. 229.

1 Youth should watch joys and shoot them as they fly.

DRYDEN, Aureng-Zebe. Act III, sc. 1.

2 Let's now take our time
While we're in our prime,
And old, old age is afar off:
For the evil, evil days

ROBERT HERRICK, To Be Merry.

3 Youth flies. (Fugit juvenus.)

HORACE, Epodes. No. XVII, l. 21.

Youth now flees on feathered foot.
R. L. STEVENSON, To Will H. Low.

Youth is a malady of which one becomes cured a little every day.

BENITO MUSSOLINI, on his fiftieth birthday.

4 This be our solace: that it was not said
When we were young and warm and in our prime,

Upon our couch we lay as lie the dead,
Sleeping away the unreturning time.

EDNA ST VINCENT MILLAY, Sonnet.

5 That Youth's sweet-scented manuscript

OMAR KHAYYAM, Rubāiyāt. St. 96. (Fitzgerald, tr.)

6 O Youth with song and laughter,
Go not so lightly by.

Have pity—and remember

How soon thy roses die!

ARTHUR WALLACE PEACHE, O Youth With Blossoms Laden

7 Youth flies, as bloom forsakes the grove,
When icy winter blows
And transient are the smiles of love,
As dew-drops on the rose.

T. L. PEACOCK, Genius of the Thames. St. 11.

8 The spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes
SHAKESPEARE, Antony and Cleopatra, IV, 4, 26.

Clay lies still, but blood's a rover,
Breath's a ware that will not keep.

Up, lad: when the journey's over
There'll be time enough to sleep.

A. E. HOUSMAN, Reveries.

9 Then come kiss me, Sweet-and-twenty,
Youth's a stuff will not endure.

SHAKESPEARE, Twelfth Night. Act II, sc. 3, l. 53.

10 There are gains for all our losses,
There are balms for all our pains;
But when youth, the dream, departs,
It takes something from our hearts,
And it never comes again.

R. H. STODOLSKY, The Flight of Youth.

11 In youth alone unhappy mortals live;
But ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive.

VERNON, Georgia. Bk. II, l. 258. (Dryden, tr.)

12 Enjoy the season of thy prime; all things soon decline: one summer turns the kid into a shaggy goat. (Τὸ δὲ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων νεανίαδος

Your women shall scream like peacocks when they talk and your men neigh like horses when they laugh. You shall call 'round' 'raound,' and 'very' 'varry,' and 'news' 'noose' till the end of time. You shall be governed by the Irishman and the German, the vendors of drinks and the keepers of vile dens, that your streets may be filthy in your midst and your sewage arrangements filthier.

RUDYARD KIPLING, Letter to The Pioneer Mail, Allahabad, India, 13 Nov., 1889. These letters were afterwards collected and published in a volume called From Sea to Sea, but the sentences above, which have been called "Kipling's seven-fold curse on America," were omitted. They were written in resentment at the purloining of his books by American publishers. (See The Bookman, vol. ix, p. 429.)

I chanced upon a new book yesterday:
I opened it, and, where my finger lay
Twixt page and uncut page, these words I read

—Some six or seven at most—and learned thereby

That you, Fitzgerald, whom by ear and eye
She never knew, "thanked God my wife was dead."

Ay, dead! and were yourself alive, good Fitz,

How to return you thanks would tax my wits:

Kicking you seems the lot of common curs—
While more appropriate greeting lends you grace.

Surely to spit there glorifies your face—
Spitting—from lips once sanctified by Hera.

ROMAN BROWNING, To Edward Fitzgerald. (The Athenæum, 13 July, 1889.)

Mrs. Browning's death is rather a relief to me, I must say. No more Aurora Leighs, thank God! A woman of real genius, I know; but what is the upshot of it all? She and her sex had better mind the kitchen and the children; and perhaps the poet. Except in such things as little weavers, they only devote themselves to what does do much better, leaving that which men do worse or not at all.

If every man's internal care
Were written on his brow,
How many would our pity share
Who have our envy now!

The fatal secret, when reveal'd,
Of every aching breast,
Would prove that only while conceal'd
Their lot appeared the best.

(Se a ciascun l'interno affanno
Si leggesse in fronte scritto,
Quanti mai, che invidia fanno,
Ci farebbero pietà!)

Si vedrà che i lor nemici
Anno in seno; e si riduce
Nel parere a noi felici
Ogni lor felicità.

PIETRO METASTASIO, Giuseppe Riconosciuto. Pt. 1. (Opere, vol. vii, p. 266. Paris, 1780)

If mental sufferings we could read
Inscribed with truth upon each brow,
With pity then our hearts would bleed,
For those whom most we envy now!

METASTASIO. (CHARLES BURNET, tr., Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the Abate Metastasio. Vol. i, p. 354. 1796)

If all was written on the brow,
Which inwardly gives pain,
How many who are envied now
Compassion would obtain!

For oft, concealed within the breast,
They lodge their deadliest foe;
And being thought by others blest
Is all the bliss they know.

METASTASIO. (JAMES GLASSFORD, tr., Select Airs from Metastasio. In his Miscellaneous, p. 53. 1818)

Did every outward feature show
The inward pang of secret woe,
How oft would those our pity know,
That now our envy move.

'Twould then be seen, in many a breast,
What cruel foes their peace molest;
And those, who seem to us so blest,
As wretched then would prove.

METASTASIO. (JOHN MOORE, tr., Dramas and Other Poems of the Abbé Pietro Metastasio: The Discovery of Joseph. Pt. i, iii, 374. 1800)

If each man's secret, unguessed case
Were written on his brow,
How many would our pity share
Who have our envy now!

And if the promptings of each heart
No artifice concealed,
How many trusting friends would part
At what they saw revealed.

The more it changes, the more it's the same thing. (Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose.)

ALFRED KARR, Les Gueux; Les Femmes, Jan., 1849. (Edition Levy, vol. vi, p. 304.) In 1875, KARR used this phrase for the title of two volumes of articles dealing with the events of 1874. The first volume was called "Plus ça change," and the second, "Plus c'est la même chose."

Of all that I have written, stories, plays, history, criticism, fantasia, verse and prose, if I have the rare and happy fortune to be survived by anything, it will be by two little phrases, three lines in all, very light baggage.

... One is the résumé of my political studies—of what I have read and what I have seen—written in 1848: "The more, it changes, the more it's the same thing." The other is older; it may be found in the Gueux of 1840 "Let us abolish the death penalty, so that the assassins may begin" ("De tout ce que j'ai écrit, romans, pièces de théâtre, histoire, critique, fantasia, vers et prose, etc., si j'ai cette rare et heureuse chance que quelque chose me survive, ce sera deux petites phrases composant trois lignes à elles deux, bagage bien léger. . . . L'une est un résumé de mes études politiques—de ce que j'ai lu et de ce que j'ai vu—je l'ai écrite en 1848: "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." L'autre est plus ancienne; on la trouverait dans les Gueux, de 1840: "Abolissons la peine de mort, mais que messieurs les assassins commencent.")

I do solemnly swear by that which I hold most sacred:

That I will be loyal to the profession of medicine and just and generous to its members;
That I will lead my life and practise my art in uprightness and honor;

That into whatsoever house I shall enter, it shall be for the good of the sick to the utmost of my power, I holding myself aloof from wrong, from corruption, and from the tempting of others to vice;

That I will exercise my art solely for the cure of my patients, and will give no drug, perform no operation for a criminal purpose, even if solicited, far less suggest it;

That whatsoever I shall see or hear of the lives of men which is not fitting to be spoken, I will keep inviolably secret.

These things I do promise, and in proportion as I am faithful to this my oath may happiness and good repute be ever mine—the opposite if I shall be forewarn.

The Hippocratic Oath. This oath, which probably originated with Hippocrates, about 400 B. C., and which certainly embodies the ideals of medical ethics for which he stood, has been subject to many revisions. The version given above is that made by the late Professor John G. Curtis, of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and is a fairly close paraphrase of the Greek. In this form it is administered at each commencement to the candidates for the degree of Doctor of Medicine at the University of Cornell, and at other universities.

One evening in October,
When I was far from sober,
And dragging home a load with manly pride,
My feet began to waver,
So I laid down in the gutter.
And a pig came up and parked right by my side.

Then I warbled, "It's fair weather,"
When good fellows got together,
Till a lady passing by was heard to say:
"You can tell a man who boozes."
By the company he chooses.
Then the pig got up and slowly walked away.

We know no spectacle so ridiculous as the British public in one of its periodical fits of morality. In general, domesticity, divorces, and family quarrels pass with little notice. We read the scandal, talk about it for a day, and forget it. But once in six or seven years our virtue becomes outrageous. We cannot suffer the laws of religion and decency to be violated. We must make a stand against vice. We must teach libertines that the English people appreciate the importance of domestic ties. Accordingly some unfortunate man, in no respect more depraved than hundreds whose offences have been treated with lenity, is singled out as an expiatory sacrifice. If he has children, they are to be taken from him. If he has a profession, he is to be driven from it. He is cut by the higher orders, and hissed by the lower. He is, in truth, a sort of whipping-boy, by whose vicarious agonies all the other transgressors of the same class are, it is supposed, sufficiently chastised. We reflect very complacently on our own severity, and compare with great pride the high standard of morals established in England with the Parisian laxity. At length our anger is satiated. Our victim is ruined and heart-broken. And our virtue goes quietly to sleep for seven years more.

If a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or make a better mouse-trap than his neighbor, though he builds his house in the woods, the world will make a beaten path to his door.

EMERSON. (Borrowings, p. 38, 1889) Since the discussion of the authorship of this quotation which appears on page 630 was written, a mass of new material has come into the hands of the compiler, but none of it invalidates, or even weakens, the opinion previously set forth, that the sentence is from a lecture delivered by Ralph Waldo Emerson at San Francisco or Oakland, California, in the spring of 1871. There is some reason to believe that it is from the lecture on "Chivalry," delivered May 17th at San Francisco, for Mr. James Bradley Thayer (A Western Journey With Mr. Emerson, p. 121) describes it as "excerpted from certain fragments, [he] having failed to find one of his best lectures that had been brought along, but lay hidden somewhere in his trunk." An interesting detail is the recent discovery in The Saturday Evening Post for 20 March, 1882, of an abstract of Emerson's lecture on "Chivalry," in which occurs the following: "Every man must be brought at his own price to his own place. Lawyers argue that if a man understand the law he may open his office in a vice-barrel, and the people will come to him when they want him." This points strongly to the "mouse-trap" being Emerson's. See the footnote on page 630.

There is nothing resembling it, however, in the lecture on "Chivalry" as printed in his works. Mr. David C. Abrams, of the Library of Congress, has pointed out the amusing coincidence that Jay Gould, in his youth, was the inventor of a mouse-trap, and that in later years he was the most distinguished member of the New York church of the Rev. John R. Paxson, whose friends have claimed that he, and not Emerson, was the author of the quotation. Nothing has been discovered to substantiate this claim; and further examination also confirms the fitness of Elbert Hubbard's case. It is perhaps enough to point out that Hubbard's first published writing appeared in 1893 (see the article on Hubbard in the Biography of American Biography), while the "mouse-trap" appeared in 1839. For a discussion of the evidence in detail, see STEVENSON, Famous Single Poems, revised (1935) edition, pp. 343-351.

He dwelt with the tribes of the marsh and moor,
He sat at the board of kings;
He tasted the toil of the burdened slave
And the joy that triumph brings.
But whether to jungle or palace hall
Or white-walled tent he came,
He was brother to king and soldier and slave,
His welcome was the same.

HENRY CANOT LODGE, Eulogy on Theodore Roosevelt, 9 Feb., 1919. The assumption has been that this stanza was quoted from a poem by some unknown author, but intensive search has failed to discover it, and it seems probable that it was original with Senator Lodge.

In the life of a successful farmer... the year flows on harmoniously, fortunately, through ploughing, seed-time, growth of grain, the yellowing of it beneath sleek autumn suns and big autumn moons, the cutting of it down, riotous harvest-home, final sale, and large balance at the banker's. From the point of view of almost unvarying success, the farmer's life becomes beautiful, poetic. Everything is an aid and a help to him. Nature puts her shoulder to his wheel. He takes the winds, the clouds, the sunbeams, the rolling stars into partnership, and, asking no dividend, they let him retain the entire profits.

President Benjamin Harrison, in obedience to an act of Congress, signed a proclamation recommending that October 31, the first anniversary of the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial, be observed everywhere by suitable

...in the schools. The National Commission of Superintendents of Education appointed a committee to conduct the entire movement, and the chairman of this committee was Francis Bellamy, representing The Youth's Companion, a juvenile weekly published at Boston, Mass., which had taken a leading part in promoting the celebration. Under his direction the program was prepared, including the Pledge to the Flag, which was first published in The Youth's Companion 6 Sept., 1892 (vol. iv, no. 36, p. 446). In its issue for 20 Dec., 1917 (vol. xii, no. 51, p. 722), the Companion printed a short account of how the pledge came to be written, stating that "in 1888 the late James B. Upham, then a member of the Perry Mason Company [publishers of The Youth's Companion], began the great work of rousing public opinion . . . to the opportunity of fostering patriotism by putting the Stars and Stripes over every schoolhouse in the United States. . . . Mr. Upham had already written a form of pledge very much like that which is now so well known, and with the help of other members of the firm and of members of the editorial staff the present and final form was written." This indicates that Mr. Upham was the author of the first draft of the pledge, and that Mr. Bellamy assisted in putting it into its final shape.

*Attributed to Voltaire, by S. G. Tallentyre (E. Beatrice Hall), an English writer, in her book, The Friends of Voltaire (p. 199), published in England in 1906. The sentence was enclosed in quotation marks, and was supposed to have been written in a letter to Claude Adrien Helvétius, referring to his book, De l'Esprit, which Voltaire greatly admired. The quotation was so striking that it was widely quoted, but an exhaustive search through Voltaire's letters to Helvétius failed to disclose it, and finally Miss Tallentyre was asked where it could be found. In a letter to Mr. Harry Weinberger, of New York City, dated 20 July, 1935, she says: "I believe I did use the phrase as a description of Voltaire's attitude on Helvétius' book On the Mind. I did not intend to imply that Voltaire used these words verbatim, and should be surprised if they are found in any of his works. They are rather a paraphrase of Voltaire's words in the Essay on Tolerance, 'Think for yourselves, and let others enjoy the privilege to do so too.' Of course Miss Tallentyre's sentence is not in any way a paraphrase of this one, but it may very fairly be held to paraphrase a passage in Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary referring to Helvétius."

I liked the author of De l'Esprit. . . . But I have never approved either the words or his book, as the Encyclopédie, which he so systematically refuted. I have, however, bolder than his part when absurd men have condemned him for these very truths. (J'aimais l'auteur du livre De l'Esprit. . . . Mais je n'ai jamais approuvé ni les erreurs de son livre, ni les vérités triviales qu'il débite avec emphase. J'ai pris son parti hautement quand des hommes absurdes l'ont condamné pour ces vérités mêmes.)

3 God walks among the pots and pipkins. 1063:14

SAINT TERESA.

Lord of the pots and pipkins, since I have no time to be

A saint by doing lovely things and vigiling with Thee,

By watching in the twilight dawn, and storming Heaven's gates,

Make me a saint by getting meals, and washing up the plates!

CECILY HALLACK, Divine Office of the Kitchen.

The title is followed by the line, "God walks among the pots and pipkins.—Saint Teresa." The poem was composed, so Miss Hallack states, as a message to a girl friend who complained that domestic drudgery was spoiling her hands for violin playing. In some way this got twisted in the head of Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, the famous London preacher, and at a service in Westminster Chapel in the summer of 1928, he read the poem from the pulpit, announcing that it had been written by an English servant girl of nineteen. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., heard of it and was so moved by this extraordinary pety that he had some copies of the poem printed under the title, Lord of All Pots and Pans, ascribing it to the aforesaid servant girl, and distributed them at Lakewood, N. J., on a Sunday early in April, 1929. The legend thus started still survives. (See Literary Digest, 2 March, 1929, p. 36)

4 We have an expression in New York, when 1091:24

we meet a very difficult problem—"You will have to get a Philadelphia lawyer to solve that." Few people know that there is a basis of truth in the expression, for in 1735, when no New York lawyer could be obtained to defend John Peter Zenger, accused of criminal libel, because his two lawyers, James Alexander and William Smith, having challenged the jurisdiction of the court, had already been disbarred, the friends of Zenger came to Philadelphia and obtained the services of Andrew Hamilton, then eighty years of age, to go to New York without fee, and defend the action in the face of a hostile court.

HARRY WEINBERGER, The Liberty of the Press.
Address at Independence Hall, Philadelphia,
9 March, 1934.

1. 1103:12
The world has never had a good definition of the word liberty, and the American people, just now, are much in want of one. We all declare for liberty; but in using the same word we do not all mean the same thing. With some the word liberty may mean for each man to do as he pleases with himself, and the product of his labor; while with others the same word may mean for some men to do as they please with other men, and the product of other men's labor. Here are two, not only different, but incompatible things, called by the same name, liberty. And it follows that each of the things is, by the respective parties, called by two different and incompatible names—liberty and tyranny.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, Address, Baltimore, Md.,

2. 1242:5
Like to the falling of a Star;
Or as the flights of Eagles are.

HENRY KING (?), Sic Vita. Bishop Henry King's authorship of these lines, which are given in full on page 1242, has often been challenged on the ground that his Poems, in which they occur, were not published until 1657, whereas they had already appeared in Francis Beaumont's Poems, published in 1640. Nevertheless, scholars are pretty generally of the opinion that they belong to King, whose verses, after the fashion of the time, were circulated in manuscript form for many years before they were collected and printed. (See Lawrence Mason's unpublished thesis on King, in the Yale University Memorial Library.) The verses were imitated by Francis Quarles, John Philpot, Simon Wastell, and many others, Dr. Mason having unearthed fifteen poems written on this model. Here are two of them:

Like to the Bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass much like a look,
Even such is Man, who lives by breath;
Is here, now there: so life, and death.

UNKNOWN, Verses of Man's Mortality.
(SPARKES, Crumbs of Comfort. 1628.) Sometimes attributed to SIMON WASTELL.

Like to the damask Rose you see,
Or like the Blossom on the tree,
Or like the dainty Flower of May,
Or like the Morning to the day,
Or like the Sun, or like the Shade,
Or like the Gourd that Jonas had;

Even such is Man while there is a span,
Drawn out and cut, and so is done.

The Rose withers, the Blossom blancheth,
The Flower fades, the Morning changeth:

The Sun sets, the Shadow flies,
The Gourd consumes, and Man he dies.

FRANCIS QUARLES, Hos Ego Versiculos. (Argyllus and Parthenia. 1629.) These lines had been printed anonymously in Sparkes' Crumbs of Comfort, in 1628, as the beginning of a poem of seventy-two lines. They have been attributed to Simon Wastell, but were claimed by Quarles.

There is, however, yet another piece attributed to King which has considerable interest both in itself and as illustrating a peculiarity of the time. There was still, on the one hand, a certain shyness in regard to the formal publication of poetry, and, on the other, the inveterate habit of handing about MS. copies of verses, with the result that ill-informed persons entered them in their albums, and piratical, or, at least, enterprising publishers issued them in collections, under different names. The instance at present referred to is the curious batch of similes for the shortness and instability of life sometimes entitled Sic Vita. . . . There can be no doubt that King was quite equal to composing . . . them; but his authorship is a question of less interest than the way in which the circumstances illustrate the manners and taste of the time.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY, Lesser Caroline Poets.
(Cambridge History of English Literature, vol. vii, p. 94.)

[There is] detailed evidence to establish the overwhelming probability of Henry King's authorship, . . . as well as the reasonable probability of his priority in employing the stanzaic form involved. . . . The title may well have been taken from King's favorite Petronius, cap. 45: "sic vita truditur."

LAWRENCE MASON, English Poems of Henry King, p. 207, note.

What is not today, will be tomorrow: so we trudge through life. (Quod hodie non est, cras erit: sic vita truditur.)

2. Abstain from beans? (ἀναίστημι τὰς φακές.)
PYTHAGORAS. (ARISTOTLE, On the Pythagorean.) According to Aristotle, this Pythagorean rule had nothing to do with politics; beans were banished from the diet because they resembled the testicles. (See PROCLUS LACERTIUS, Pythagorica, BK. VIII, sec. 34.) However, the sunflower was used for the lot by which officials at Athens were chosen. (δὲ ῥοδάκη λαχόντες), and the phrase was given that meaning. Diogenes Laertius states that Pythagoras was captured and killed by some enemies pursuing him because he refused to cross a field of beans.

Abstain from beans. There be sundry interpretations of this symbol. But Plutarch and Cicero think beans to be forbidden of Pythagoras, because they be windy and do engender impure humors and for that cause provoke badly lust.
RICHARD TAVERNER, Proverbs, Fo 1^v. (1534)

To abstain from beans, that is, not to meddle in civil affairs or business of the commonweal, for in old times the election of Magistrates was made by the pulling of beans.

JOHN LYLY, Euphues, p. 148. (1579)

6. The whole tendency over many years has been to view the interstate commerce clause in the light of present-day civilization, although it was written into the Constitution in the horse-and-buggy days of the eighteenth century.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, at a press conference at the White House, 31 May, 1935. He was commenting on the unanimous decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Schechter case, rendered a few days previously, in which the National Recovery Administration had been declared unconstitutional, and suggesting that the Constitution was antiquated and must be modernized. The N. R. A., which had adopted the Blue Eagle as its emblem, had in 1933-4 been the most spectacular activity of the Roosevelt administration in attempting to regulate all the business of the country by the use of codes and penalties, but the Supreme Court ended it abruptly by ruling unanimously that the Federal Government had no constitutional right to interfere with any business not engaged in interstate commerce. The phrase "horse-and-buggy days" was seized upon by the administration's critics as an apt characterization of the peaceful era to which the country should be happy to return. (The newspaper reports of Mr. Roosevelt's remarks vary somewhat. The one used here is from the New York Times, 1 June, 1935.)

7. I hope that your committee will not permit doubt as to constitutionality, however respectable, to block the suggested legislation.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, in campaign against Wilson and Taft in 1912.

Dear Maria.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Letter to Mrs. Bellamy Horser, 9 Dec., 1906.

We fight in honorable fashion for the good of mankind; fearless of the future, unheeding of our individual fates, with unflinching hearts and undimmed eyes; we stand at Armageddon, and we battle for the Lord.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, Speech, at Chicago, 17 June, 1912, on the eve of the Republican National Convention which re-nominated Taft.

We seemed to see our flag unfurled,
Our champion waiting in his place
For the last battle of the world,—
The Armageddon of the race.
J. G. WHITTIER, Rantoul.

And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

New Testament: Revelation, xvi, 16. Armageddon, or Har-Magedon, meant Mount Megiddo, possibly Mount Carmel, at whose foot lay the plain of Megiddo, the scene of many battles.

Salamander? Call it Gerrymander.

BENJAMIN RUSSELL, Retort, in 1811, to Gilbert Stuart, the celebrated painter. Russell was editor of the Massachusetts Centinel, and had hung on the wall of his office a map showing the proposed redistricting of Essex County, which the Democratic legislature was putting through in order to give them control of the district. Russell had blocked the new district off in color, and Stuart, coming in one day and looking at the map, remarked that it resembled a monstrous animal, and took a pencil and added claws. "There," he said, "that will do for a salamander." "Salamander?" echoed Russell. "Call it Gerrymander," and coined a word which has passed into the language to describe sinuous political redistricting. The point of the retort was that the Governor of Massachusetts was named Elbridge Gerry, and it was he who was supposed to have instigated the redistricting, though, as it developed later, he was opposed to it. It should be noted that his name was pronounced with a hard "g." (See BUCKINGHAM, Specimens of Newspaper Writing, vol. ii, p. 91; Dictionary of American Biography, vol. xvi, p. 238.) Mr. John Ward Dean in an article in the New England Historical and Genealogical Register (vol. xlv, p. 374), questions the attribution of the phrase to Mr. Russell, citing a contemporary statement of Samuel Batchelder, of Cambridge, to the effect that the claws were added by Elkanah Tisdale, a miniature painter, and that the name "gerrymander" was suggested by Richard Alsop, a once-noted political satirist. Another account attributes it to James Ogilvie, a lecturer on oratory.

I have come home to look after my fences.
JOHN SHEKMAN, Speech, to his neighbors at Mansfield, Ohio, referring to the fences around his farm; said to be the origin of the political phrase. (See STODDARD, As I Knew Them, p. 161.)

1 I will not accept if nominated, and will not serve if elected.

WILLIAM TECUMSEH SHERMAN, Telegram, to General Henderson of Missouri, 5 June, 1884. Henderson was at the Republican National Convention at Chicago, and had repeatedly urged Sherman to accept the nomination for President, which Sherman had steadily refused to do. The telegram was in answer to a last urgent appeal. See SHERMAN, Memoirs, 4th edition, p. 466. This final chapter was added by members of Sherman's family after his death, and the text of the telegram as given is on the evidence of his son, Thomas. It is usually quoted, "If nominated I will not accept, if elected I will not serve." On 25 May, Sherman had written to James G. Blaine, "I will not in any event entertain or accept a nomination as candidate for President. . . . I would account myself a fool, a madman, an ass, to embark now, at sixty-five years of age, in a career that may at any moment become tempestuous." See North Amer. Review, Dec., 1888.

2 Hello, my old potato.

ALFRED E. SMITH, to Franklin D. Roosevelt, at the Democratic State Convention, at Albany, N. Y., 4 Oct., 1932. It was the first meeting of the two men since Roosevelt had defeated Smith for the presidential nomination at the Democratic National Convention at Chicago on 1 July, after a bitter contest, accentuated by Smith's feeling that he had been betrayed. It has been denied that Smith actually said this, but in a letter to the compiler he writes: "At the State Convention for the nomination of Governor, President Roosevelt was on the platform as I came up to place Governor Lehman's name in nomination and I said to him, 'Hello, my old potato.'"

"Well, ta ta, my turnip!" observed Mr. Waddle, and away the coaches rattled in opposite directions.

HENRY COCKTON, Valentine Vox. Ch. 5. (1840)

3 What a man that would be had he . . . the least knowledge of the value of red tape.

4 In your war of 1812, your arms on shore were covered by disaster. . . . Who first relit the fires of national glory and made the welkin ring with the shouts of victory?

SENATOR R. F. STOCKTON, Speech, U. S. Senate, 7 Jan., 1852, against flogging in the navy. (Congressional Globe, v. 21, pt. 1, p. 219, col. 3.)

5 Hanna was a fat-frier, not the fat-frier. The fat-frier was John P. Forster, president of the League of Young Republican Clubs. It was in 1888 that he wrote a letter suggesting 'to fry the fat out of the manufacturers,' i. e., secure campaign contributions.

HENRY L. STODDARD, As I Knew Them.

6 You can't beat somebody with nobody.

MARK SULLIVAN, Our Times, III, 289. Quoted as an axiom of practical politics. Usually attributed to "Uncle Joe" Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives for many years.

One truth which they enforce is the old one that you can't beat somebody with nobody.

Editorial, N. Y. Times, 3 July, 1932.

7 Congressmen? In Washington they hitch horses to them.

TIMOTHY D. (BIG TIM) SULLIVAN, of New York City, announcing his decision to retire from the House of Representatives and return to the New York State Senate.

8 The Forgotten Man works and votes—generally he prays—but his chief business in life is to pay. . . . If any student of social science comes to appreciate the case of the Forgotten Man, he will become . . . a hard-hearted skeptic as regards any scheme of social amelioration. He will always want to know, Who and where is the Forgotten Man in this case, who will have to pay for it all?

WILLIAM GRAHAM SUMNER, The Forgotten Man. (Title essay in The Forgotten Man and Other Essays, 1883.)

The State cannot get a cent for any man without taking it from some other man, and this latter must be a man who has produced and saved it. The latter is the Forgotten Man.

WILLIAM GRAHAM SUMNER, What Social Classes Owe to Each Other. As will be seen from the above, Mr. Sumner's "forgotten man" was the taxpayer.

The Forgotten Man was never more completely forgotten than he is now. Congress does not know that he exists. The President [Warren G. Harding] suspects that there is such a person, who may turn up at the polls in November, but he is not quite sure.

FRANK I. COBB, Editorial, New York World, Sept., 1922.

These unhappy times call for the building of plans that rest upon the forgotten, the unorganized but indispensable units of economic power, for plans like those of 1917 that build from the bottom up and not from the top down, that put their faith once more in the forgotten man at the bottom of the economic pyramid.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 7 April, 1932. It will be noted that Mr. Roosevelt's "forgotten man" bears no resemblance to Mr. Sumner's.

The Forgotten Man is a myth.

ALFRED E. SMITH, Editorial, The New Outlook, October, 1932, p. 5.

9 Talking for Buncombe.

FELIX WALKER, Speech on the Missouri Bill,

House of Representatives, 25 Feb., 1820. Walker was a Representative from North Carolina, and Buncombe County was part of his district. He was a naive old mountaineer, familiarly called "the old oil-jug" because of his flow of language, and toward the close of the debate on the Missouri Bill, while the House was impatiently calling for the question, he rose to speak. Several members urged him to desist, but he refused, stating that he was bound "to make a speech for Buncombe." For a full account of the incident, see the communication from Dr. William Darlington in The Historical Magazine, Oct., 1858. (Vol. i, no. 10, p. 311.) Dr. Darlington was a member of the House at the time and was seated near Walker when he coined the phrase. His account is partially confirmed by a passage in the Annals of Congress (16th Cong., 1st sess., vol. xxxvi, col. 1539) which states, under date of 25 Feb., 1820, "Mr. Walker, of North Carolina, rose then to address the Committee on the question, but the question was called for so clamorously and so perseveringly that Mr. W. could proceed no farther than to move that the Committee rise." The phrase has been erroneously attributed to John Cuipepper by Joseph T. Buckingham (Personal Memoirs and Recollections of Editorial Life, vol. i, p. 207, footnote), but no evidence is given to prove the attribution, and while Mr. Cuipepper was also a Congressman from North Carolina, Buncombe County was not in his district. One A. Wilder, writing in Miscellaneous Notes and Queries (Manchester, N. H.) April, 1887 (vol. iv, no. 4, p. 287), attributes the phrase to Thomas L. Clingman, but Clingman did not enter Congress until 1843, and the phrase was in use long before that, as is shown by the following

"Talking to Bunkum!" This is an old and common saying at Washington, when a member of Congress is making one of those hum-drum and unlistened-to "long talks" which have lately become so fashionable—not with the hope of being heard in the House, but to afford an enlightened representative a pretence for sending a copy of his speech to his constituents. . . . This is cantly called "Talking to Bunkum": an "honorable gentleman" long ago, having said that he was not talking to the House, but to the people of a certain county in his district, which, in local phrase, he called "Bunkum."

UNKNOWN (Niles' Weekly Register, 27 Sept., 1838. Vol. xxiv, no. 389, p. 66.)

Several years ago, in Congress, the member from this immediate district (Buncombe County, N. C.) arose to address the House, without any extraordinary powers either in manner or matter to interest his audience. Many members left the hall. Very sadly, he told those who were so kind as to remain that they ought to go too; for he should speak for some time, but he was only talking for Buncombe.

JOHN WHITMAN, Historical Sketches of North Carolina. Vol. 2, p. 51. (1864)

Talk plain, tough, and leave bunkum for right honorables who keep their places thereby.

CHARLES KINGSLY, Two Years Ago. Ch. 25.

America too will find that caucuses, divisionists, stump-oratory, and speeches to Buncombe will not carry men to the immortal gods.

CARLYLE, Letter-Day Pamphlets: Parliaments.

1 Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party.

CHARLES E. WELLER A sentence devised to test the practicability of the first typewriter, constructed at Milwaukee, Wis., by Christopher Latham Sholes, in the autumn of 1867. (See WELLER, The Early History of the Typewriter.) Mr. Weller was a court reporter and a friend of Sholes. He says: "We were then in the midst of an exciting political campaign and it was then for the first time that the sentence was inaugurated . . . and repeated many times to test the speed of the machine." It is still in use, and The New Yorker (1 Feb., 1936, p. 12) states that there are also test sentences for the telephone and the telegraph. The Bell Laboratories use "Joe took father's shoe-bench out" to test the volume of its phones, and "Some settlers suggest settling southern settlements in succession" to test articulation. The Western Union uses "William Jax quickly taught five dozen Republicans" to test its teletype-writers, and for radio-telephony, the American Telephone and Telegraph Company uses "The barking dog's bark is worse than its bite."

3 To seek for political flaws is no use; His opponents will find he is sound on the goose.

UNKNOWN. (Providence Journal, 18 June, 1857.) "Sound on the goose" meant orthodox as to opinions and sentiments, on the popular side of any discussion.

4 The Copperhead Bright Convention meets in Indianapolis today.

UNKNOWN. (Cincinnati Gazette, 30 July, 1862.)

A glorious sequel to the Copperhead convention, UNKNOWN. (Cincinnati Gazette, 31 July, 1862.) Both references were to the Indiana Democratic convention, and are the earliest printed use of the word "copperhead" in this connection. James Ford Rhodes (History of the United States, iv, 284) states that the earliest use of the word he could find was in the Cincinnati Commercial, of 1 Oct., 1862. Albert Matthews (Publications of the Colonial Society of Massachusetts, xii, 207) states that he found it in the Chicago Tribune, for 24 Sept., 1862. (PAUL S. SMITH, First Use of the Term Copperhead, American Historical Review, xxxii, 799.)

Every Democrat who did not openly and actively support the Administration and the war was labelled a venomous 'copperhead,' at once a southern sympathiser and a traitor to the Union.

MILFORD ERWIN, History of Williamson County, Illinois, p. 302.

As the copperhead is a particularly poisonous snake indigenous to southern Illinois the meaning was clear.

PAXTON HIBBEN, The Peerless Leader, p. 25.

1 The Mysterious Stranger.

In the election of 1904, the state of Missouri for the first time appeared in the Republican column. On November 10, John T. McCutcheon published a cartoon in the Chicago Tribune with this caption, which instantly became famous. A fragment by Mark Twain called The Mysterious Stranger was published in 1916.

1636:8

Doctor Livingstone, I presume?

HENRY M. STANLEY to David Livingstone, when he found the latter in the heart of the African jungle. 10 Nov., 1871. Stanley's expedition had been financed by James Gordon Bennett, publisher of the New York Herald, and on 2 July, 1872, The Herald printed an account of the meeting in a "special from Central Africa." Here is its description of the crucial moment:

Preserving a calmness of exterior before the Arabs which was hard to simulate as he reached the group, Mr. Stanley said:—

"Doctor Livingstone, I presume?"

A smile lit up the features of the hale white man as he answered:—

"Yes, that is my name."

1636:10

"Tell it to the Marines." The time of the saying was toward eleven of the clock on an autumn morning in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and sixty-four; the place, the Green Park of St. James. It so befell that His light-hearted Majesty Charles the Second, with an exceedingly bored expression upon his swarthy face, was strolling in the shade with the ingenious Mr. Samuel Pepys, Secretary to the Admiralty. [Pepys tells the King an anecdote about flying fish having been seen in the waters of the Indies by the officers of a British ship. The King is incredulous and turns to a Colonel of the newly-raised Marine Regiment, who happens to be near.]

"What say you, Colonel, to a man who swears he hath seen fishes fly in the air?"

"I should say, Sir," returned the sea-soldier simply, "that the man hath sailed in southern seas. For, when Your Majesty's business carried me there of late, I did frequently observe more flying fish in one hour than the hairs of my head in number."

His Majesty glanced narrowly at the Colonel's frank, weather-beaten face. Then, with a laugh, he turned to the Secretary.

"Mr. Pepys," said he, "from the very nature of their calling, no class of our subjects can have so wide a knowledge of seas and lands as the officers and men of our loyal Marine Regiment. Henceforward ere we cast doubts upon a tale that lacketh likelihood, we will first tell it to the Marines."

W. P. DRURY, The Tadpole of an Archangel, The Petrified Eye, and Other Naval Stories: Preface. (1904)

The story of "Tell it to the Marines" is taken from my earliest literary crime, The Petrified Eye. It is a leg-pull of my youth of which I have grown a little ashamed. I seem to have forged the style of Samuel Pepys so successfully that many of our comrades have wasted time hunting thru the diary to verify my statement.

W. P. DRURY, Letter, to Brig.-Gen. George Richards, U. S. Marine Corps. (See N. Y. Sun, 4 Feb., 1931.) Mr. Drury is himself a retired Colonel of the British Marine Corps.

Song: Familiar Refrains

5 A face behind a mask,

A pair of dreamy eyes,

A smile that drags you downward,

From the gates of Paradise;

Forgive, but don't forget,

These warning words I ask,

For such a face, brought my disgrace,

A face behind a mask.

WILL D. COBB, A Face Behind a Mask. (1900)

Music by Ben M. Jerome. Popularized by Bettina Girard.

For I just can't make my eyes behave,

Two bad brown eyes, I am their slave;

My lips may say, "Run away from me,"

But my eyes say, "Come and play with me."

WILL D. COBB, I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave. (1906) Sung with great éclat by Anna Held in A Parisian Model.

For a woman loves forever, but a man loves for a day;

She makes him a god for her worship, he makes her a toy for his play;

For the man is the guest at the banquet where music of love madly plays,

But the woman, 'tis over the woman who pays.

WILL D. COBB, It's the Woman Who Pays.

Music by Gus Edwards. (1916)

School-days, school-days, dear old golden rule days,

Readin' and 'ritin' and 'arithmetick,

Taught to the tune of a hick'ry stick;

You were my queen in calico,

I was your bashful barefoot beau,
And you wrote on my slate, I love you, Joe,
When we were a couple of kids.

Oh, my poor Nelly Gray, they have taken you away,

And I'll never see my darling any more;
I'm sitting by the river and I'm weeping all the day,

For you've gone from the old Kentucky shore.

BENJAMIN RUSSELL HANBY, Darling Nelly Gray. (1856) A lament of a young negro slave for his sweetheart, which became ammunition for the abolitionists just prior to the Civil War. The Hanby home at Westerville, Ohio, has recently been acquired by the state and converted into a memorial.

I guess I'll have to telegraph my baby.

GEORGE M. COHAN. Title and refrain. (1898)

Over there, over there, send the word, send the word over there!

That the Yanks are coming, the Yanks are coming,
The drums rum-tumming ev'rywhere:

So prepare, say a pray'r,
Send the word, send the word to beware!

We'll be over, we're coming over,
And we won't come back till it's over, over there.

GEORGE M. COHAN, Over There. (1917) Cohan received public thanks from President Wilson for this song, which became the official marching song of the American army. There was, of course, an epidemic of patriotic songs when America entered the war. The following are examples:

Away he went, to live in a tent;
Over in France with his regiment.
Were you there, and tell me, did you notice?
They were all out of step but Jim.

IRVING BERLIN, They Were All Out of Step But Jim. (1918)

Sister Susie's sewing shirts for soldiers,
Such skill at sewing shirts our shy young sister
Susie shows!

Some soldiers send epistles, say they'd sooner sleep in thistles

Than the saucy, soft, short shirts for soldiers sister
Susie sews.

R. P. WESTON, Sister Susie's Sewing Shirts for Soldiers. (1914) Music by Herman E. Darewski. Sung by Al Johnson.

Don't try to steal the sweetheart of a soldier,
'K's up to you to play a middy part:

Tho' he's over there and she's over here,
Still she's always in his heart.

ALFRED BRYAN, Don't Try to Steal the Sweetheart of a Soldier. (1917)

He's had no lovin' for a long, long time,
And he's got to have a lot of it now.

How'ya gonna keep 'em down on the farm,
After they've seen Parree?

SAM M. LEWIS and JOE YOUNG. Title and refrain of song set to music in 1919 by Walter Donaldson. Much more realistic than Tracy's effort quoted above. For "I did not raise my boy to be a soldier," etc., see 1864:7.

If you lak-a-me, lak I lak-a-you
And we lak-a-both the same,

Wilt thou be true, though lips of scorn
Seek to revile me when I am gone?
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Wilt Thou Be True? (1864)

3
Little Ella's an angel in the skies,
Sing, merrily sing.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Little Ella's an Angel. (1863)

Tell me of the angels, mother,
And the radiant land
Where my gentle little brother
Joined their happy band.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Tell Me of the Angels, Mother. (1863)

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Willie's Gone to Heaven. (1863) Foster was fond of Willie. He wrote two more songs about him, Willie, My Brave, and Willie, We Have Missed You, and composed the music for another by George Cooper, Willie Has Gone to the War.

Oh! comrades, fill no glass for me.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER. Title and refrain. (1855)

For the dear old Flag I die,
Mother, dry your weeping eye.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, For the Dear Old Flag I Die. (1863)

Take the locket, soldier, brother,
Don't forget, give this to mother.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Give This to Mother. (1864)

Nothing but a plain old soldier,
An old revolutionary soldier,
But I've handled a gun
Where noble deeds were done,
For the name of my commander was George Washington.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, I'm Nothing But a Plain Old Soldier. (1863)

Tell me, tell me, weary soldier,
From the rude and stirring wars,
Was my brother in the battle
Where you gain'd those noble scars?
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Was My Brother in the Battle? (1862)

6
Oh! Belle, de Lou'siana Belle,
I's gwine to marry you, Lou'siana Belle.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Lou'siana Belle. (1847) Written for Joseph Murphy.

Down in de cornfield,
Hear dat mournful sound:
All de darkies am a-weeping,
Massa's in de cold, cold ground.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Massa's in de Cold Ground. (1853)

Nelly Bly! Nelly Bly! bring de broom along,
We'll sweep de kitchen clean, my dear, and hab a little song.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Nelly Bly. (1850)

I'm coming, I'm coming, for my head is bending low.

I hear those gentle voices calling, "Old Black Joe."

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Old Black Joe. (1850)

Dere was an old nigger, dey call'd him Uncle Ned,
He's dead long ago, long ago;

He had no wool on de top ob de head,
De place wha de wool ought to grow.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Old Uncle Ned. (1848) Written for William Roark, of the "Sable Harmonists."

Oh! Susanna, don't you cry for me,
I've come from Alabama wid my banjo on my knee.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Oh! Susanna. Sung for first time at Andrews' Eagle Ice Cream Saloon, Pittsburgh, Pa., by Nelson Knease, 11 Sept., 1847, and soon a world-wide hit. Used by the Republicans in the London campaign of 1936.

Den come again, Susanna,
By de gas-light ob de moon;
We'll tum de old piano

When de banjo's out ob tune.
STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Ring de Banjo. (1851)

I hear my true-lub weep,
I hear my true-lub sigh,

"Way down in Ca-i-ro
Dis nigga's gwine to die."

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Way Down in Ca-i-ro. (1850)

Nelly was a lady,

Last night she died,

Toll de bell for lubly Nell,

My dark Virginny bride.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Nelly Was a Lady. (1849)

Edie was a lady.

DOROTHY PARKER. Caption of a review of Edith Wharton's autobiography.

1 Tell the people far and wide that better times are coming.

S. C. FOSTER, Better Times Are Coming. (1862)

Abraham the Joker soon will diskiver

We'll send him on a gunboat up Salt River. . .

Sound the rally thro' the whole United States,

Little Mac and Pendleton are our candidates.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER, Little Mac. (1864)

A campaign song for Gen. George B. McClellan.

"Up Salt River" dates from the Clay-Jackson campaign of 1832

2 There's her picture on the table,

There's a baby in the cradle,

There's a husband crying bitterly alone,

There's no wife's voice to cheer,

In his sorrow to be near,

What was paradise is now a broken home.

WILL H. FOX, The Broken Home. (1892) Popularized by May Howard.

3 Don't judge by appearances, but by his actions more,

You never know when you may drive a good man from your door;

Clothes don't make the man, you know, some wise person wrote,

For many an honest heart may beat beneath a ragged coat.

HAWLEY FRANK, Many an Honest Heart May Beat Beneath a Ragged Coat. (1901)

Music by Arthur Trevelyan. Popularized by Effie Brooklyn.

4 Sweet Adeline, My Adeline,

At night, dear heart, For you I pine.

In all my dreams, Your fair face bears;

You're the flower of my heart, Sweet Adeline.

RICHARD H. GIBARD, Sweet Adeline. (1903)

Music by Harry Armstrong. "The Old Faithful of all harmonic geysers."

5 A shady nook, a babbling brook,

Two lips where kisses dwell-o,

"Swear to be true." "I do! I do!"

Aha! the lucky fellow.

J. CHEEVER GOODWIN, A Shady Nook. From the comic opera, Wang. (1891)

For that elephant ate all night,

And that elephant ate all day,

Do what he would to get his food,

The cry was still, "More hay!"

J. CHEEVER GOODWIN, Elephant Song from Wang. (1891) See also 1558.1.

6 Two little girls in blue, lad, two little girls in blue,

They were sisters, we were brothers, and learned to love the two.

CHARLES GRAHAM, Two Little Girls in Blue. (1893) Inspired by Harris's After the Ball, and also featured by J. Aldrich Libby. See under Harris, below.

7 Just when it seemed that the end had come,

You landed me safe on the coast,

And proved you were faithful, yes, staunch and true,

Just when I needed you most.

WILLIAM BENSON GRAY, Just When I Needed You Most. (1900)

Oh, Mr. Austin, since I've been in Boston

Everything's been happiness without a care or pain

My brain's been in a constant whirl

And I'll be a much wiser girl

When I go back to Saccarappa, Maine.

WILLIAM BENSON GRAY, Oh, Mr. Austin. (1899)

8 Ol' man river, dat ol' man river,

He must know sumpin', but don't say nothin',

He just keeps rollin', he keeps on rollin' along.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, 2ND, Ol' Man River.

(1927) Music by Jerome Kern.

9 Brother, can you spare a dime?

E. Y. HARBURG. Title and refrain. (1932)

10 Oh! Mister Johnson, turn me loose,

Got no money but a good excuse.

BEN R. HARNY, Mister Johnson. (1896)

11 We shouldered arms and marched and marched away,

From Baxter street we marched to Avenue A;

The fifes and drums how sweetly they did

play,

As we marched, marched, marched in the Mulligan Guard.

EDWARD HARRIS, The Mulligan Guard.

(1873) Music by David Braham. The skit of which the song was the conclusion, a satire against the numerous semi-political military organizations of the period, was first produced at the Academy of Music, Chicago, in July, 1873. The melody became famous. Kipling mentions it in Kim as being played by the British bands in India.

1 Many a heart is aching, if you could read them all.

Many the hopes that have vanished, after the ball.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, After the Ball. (1892) One of the greatest hits in the history of Tin Pan Alley. First sung by J. Aldrich Libby, a famous baritone, at a matinee of Charles Hoyt's A Trip to Chinatown, at the Bijou Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

This is the end of our sinning,
Bright though as seemed the beginning,
You long for love that is surer,
Love that to you will be purer,
I hoped you'd always be near me,
That your heart ne'er would grow weary,
Yet you leave mine sad and dreary,
Now that I'm cast aside.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Cast Aside. (1895)

Just break the news to mother,
She knows how dear I love her,
And tell her not to wait for me,
For I'm not coming home.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Break the News to Mother. (1897) Another of Harris's great hits, recounting the heroic death of a soldier boy while saving the flag from the disgrace of being captured by the enemy on some unnamed battle-field of the Civil War. Harris got the refrain from a line in William Gillette's Secret Service, where a wounded drummer-boy is brought home and says to the dandy at the door, "Break the news to mother." The song was sung with great effect by Emma Carus, and was popular with American soldiers during the war with Spain.

Then comes the sad awakening,

The pangs of deep regret,

She longed to be forgiven,

She prayed that he'd forget.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Then Comes the Sad Awakening. (1898) Sung by Gertrude Rutledge at Hammerstein's Victoria Roof Garden.

There'll come a time, some day

When I have passed away,

There'll be no father to guide you from day to day;

Think well of all I've said:

Honor the man you wed:

Always remember my story, there'll come a time.

CHARLES K. HARRIS, There'll Come a Time. (1895)

Too late, too late, alas! too late!

The words that now you speak;

Your vows so dear I dare not hear,

My love you must not seek!

Another now doth claim my vow,

Why, darling, did you wait?

Had you but told your love last night—

Alas! 'tis now too late!

CHARLES K. HARRIS, Too Late, Alas! Too Late. (1895)

2 Listen to the mocking bird, listen to the mocking bird,

Still singing where the weeping willows wave.

ALICE HAWTHORNE, Listen to the Mocking Bird. (1870)

3 There'll be a hot time in the old town to-night!

JOSEPH HAYDEN. Refrain of popular song set to music by Theodore Metz in the fall of 1896, when the McIntyre and Heath Minstrels visited Old Town, La. Adopted by the American soldiers as the unofficial melody of the War with Spain.

4 Ain't it awful, Mabel?

JOHN EDWARD HAZARD. Title and refrain. (1908)

5 I'd leave ma happy home for you.

WILL A. HEELAN, I'd Leave Ma Happy Home for You. (1899) Music by Harry Von Tilzer.

I left my old Kentucky home for you.

WILLIAM JEROME. Title and refrain of a song set to music by Harry Von Tilzer in 1912.

I wouldn't leave my home if I were you.

ANDREW B. STERLING. Title and refrain of song set to music in 1899 by Harry Von Tilzer.

6 Dreaming, dreaming, of you, sweetheart, I am dreaming,

Dreaming of days, when you loved me best,
Dreaming of hours that have gone to rest. . . .

Dreaming.

L. S. HEISER, Dreaming. (1906) Music by J. Anton Dailey

7 All coons look alike to me.

ERNEST HOGAN. Title and refrain. (1896) One of May Irwin's great hits.

8 Hello! ma baby, Hello! ma honey,

Hello! ma rag-time gal,

Send me a kiss by wire,

Baby, my heart's on fire!

If you refuse me, Honey, you'll lose me,

Then you'll be left alone; oh, baby,

Telephone and tell me I'm your own.

FRANK HOWARD, Hello, Ma Baby. (1899)

For his last words were, Darling, I'll meet you When the robins nest again.

FRANK HOWARD, When the Robins Nest Again.

Popular song, written in 1883, the title taken from a melody by Barney Fagan. Howard's real name was Martindale. "When the robins nest again" became, in the slang of the day, synonymous with never. It is so used in John Luther Long's novel, Madame Butterfly, and also in Puccini's opera.

With the robins I'll return.

JAMES J. WALKER. Title of lyric. (1907)

1
The Bow'ry, the Bow'ry!
They say such things, and they do strange things

On the Bow'ry, the Bow'ry!
I'll never go there any more!

CHARLES H. HOYT, The Bowery (1891) Music by Percy Gaunt Introduced by Harry Conner in A Trip to Chinatown, at the Madison Square Theatre in New York City

2
But they tell me I'm awfully clever,
Oh so clever, deuced clever,
They say that they never, no never,
Met a fella so clever before

G. W. HUNT, Awfully Clever (c. 1870)

3
Ting, ting that's how the bells go,
Ting, ting pretty young thing,
You be my wife, I'll buy the ring,
Servants to wait on our ting, ting, ting
GEORGE EDWARD JACKSON Ting, Ting, That's How the Bell Goes (1885)

4
This coal black lady, She is my baby
Don't trifle with my coal black lady
W. T. JEFFERSON, My Coal Black Lady (1896)

5
Any old place I can hang my hat is home
sweet home to me

WILLIAM JEROME Title and refrain (1901)
Music by Jean Schwartz

Bedehe, I want to steal ye
WILLIAM JEROME, Bedehe (1903)
He never came back, he never came back,
His dear form she never saw more,
But how happy she'll be, when his sweet face
she'll see,

When they meet on that beautiful shore
WILLIAM JEROME, He Never Came Back (1891)

His sweet face she never saw more,
Each day as she strolls by the sea
She cries in despair as she offers this pray'r,
Oh, send back my darling to me
WILLIAM JEROME, His Sweet Face She Never Saw More (1892)

You needn't try to reason,
Your excuse is out of season,
Just kiss yourself good bye

WILLIAM JEROME Just Kiss Yourself Good Bye (1902) Music by Jean Schwartz

A "Jay" came to the city once, to see the funny sights,

With a little bunch of whiskers on his chin
WILLIAM JEROME, The Little Bunch of Whiskers on His Chin (1894) Music by Andrew Mack

6
And now we are aged and gray, Maggie,
The trials of life nearly done,
Let us ring of the days that are gone, Maggie,
When you and I were young
GEORGE W. JOHNSON, When You and I Were Young (1866) Music by J. A. Butterfield

7
Take your clothes and go.
IRVING JONAS Title and refrain (1897)

8
Weddings make a lot of people sad,
But if you're not the groom, they're not so bad,

But don't forget, folks,
That's what you get, folks,
For makin' whoopee

GUS KAHN, Makin' Whoopee (1928) Music by Walter Donaldson "Whoopie" is said to have been used as long ago as 1450, in a play called Mankind (See Literary Digest, vol. 107, no. 13, p. 43.) The Oxford Dictionary says it is of American origin dating from 1845. Its modern vogue is largely due to Walter Winchell, newspaper columnist

9
"Throw him down, McCloskey," was to be the battle cry,—
"Throw him down McCloskey, you can lick him if you try"

JOHN W. KELLY, Throw Him Down, McCloskey A popular song made famous by Maggie Chie in 1890. Kelly was known as 'The Rolling Mill Man,' and is said to have got the inspiration for the song from a bar-room fight in Union Square, New York. Maloney, the Rolling Mill Man was a popular song of which he was the author

10
Baby left her cradle for the golden shore,
O'er the silvery waters she has flown,
Gone to join the angels peaceful ever-more;
Empty is the cradle, Baby's gone
HARRY KENNEDY, "Cradle's Empty, Baby's Gone" (1880)

I had fifteen dollars in my inside pocket,
Don't you see, to me it is a warning,
Saturday night I made a call
On a friend of Tammy Hall
And the devil a cent I had on Sunday morning
HARRY KENNEDY, I Had Fifteen Dollars in My Inside Pocket (1885) Pat Rooney's great song

Molly, Molly, always so jolly,
Always laughing, chock full of glee,
Living as happy as happy can be,
Molly and I and the baby
HARRY KENNEDY, Molly, and I and the Baby (1892)

11
Sailor, take care! Sailor, take care!
Danger is near thee, beware! beware!
Many brave hearts are asleep in the deep,
So beware! beware!

ARTHUR J. LAMB, Asleep in the Deep (1898) Music by H. W. Petrie Introduced by John Early, with Haverly's Minstrels, at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago

She lives in a mansion of aching hearts,
She's one of a restless throng,
The diamonds that glitter around her throat,
They speak both of sorrow and song,
The smile on her face is only a mask,
And many the tear that starts,

For sadder it seems, when of mother she dreams,
In the mansion of aching hearts.

ARTHUR J. LAMB, The Mansion of Aching Hearts. (1902) Music by Harry Von Tilzer.

Tell me that beautiful story only once again,
Tell me of love and its glory, tho' I know it is in vain;

Your mem'ry is always before me, with joy my soul to fill,

So tell me that beautiful story,—say that you love me still.

ARTHUR J. LAMB, Tell Me That Beautiful Story. (1902) Music by Albert Von Tilzer.

1 The waiter roars it through the hall,
"We don't give bread with one fishball!"

GEORGE MARTIN LANE, The Lay of the One Fishball. The ballad was used as the basis of a mock Italian opera, Il Pesceballo, by Professor Francis James Child and James Russell Lowell.

2 She's somebody's mother, boys, don't you know,
Somebody's mother, so old and so slow.

CHARLES LAWLER and JAMES BLAKE, She's Somebody's Mother. (1897) An adaptation from Mary Dow Brine. See 1350:2.

3 There was I, waiting at the church,
Waiting at the church, waiting at the church,
When I found he'd left me in the lurch,
Lor, how it did upset me!

All at once he sent me round a note
Here's the very note, This is what he wrote,
Can't get away to marry you today—
My wife won't let me.

FRED W. LORRA, Waiting at the Church. (1906) Music by Henry E. Pether. Sung with great success by Vesta Victoria.

4 Don't say one word against her, do not say
she was untrue;
If another's won her heart she's not to blame.
This town is good, a-plenty, for the likes of me and you,

But she's a picture that deserves a better frame!
PAUL LESLIE, A Picture That Deserves a Better Frame. (1901)

5 Always take mother's advice,
She knows what is best for your good;
Let her kind words then suffice,
And always take mother's advice.

JENNIE LINDAY, Always Take Mother's Advice. (1834)

6 I'm Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines,
I often live beyond my means;
I sport young ladies in their teens,
To cut a swell in the army.

WILLIAM LINDROD, Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines. (1869) Chiefly remembered for Clyde Fitch's play of the same name, in which Ethel Barrymore made her debut at the Garrick Theatre, New York City, 4 Feb. 1901. Sometimes attributed to T. Macdougall.

7 Waltz me till I'm weary, dearie, and hold me tight,
Home was never once like this, now ain't I right?

ARTHUR LONGBRACE, Waltz Me Till I'm Weary, Dearie. (1910) Music by Tom Sherman. See also 360:6.

8 Whoa! Emma! whoa! Emma!
Emma, you've put me in quite a dilemma.
JAMES LONGDALE, Whoa, Emma. (1877) Made famous by Tony Pastor.

9 I love my wife, But oh you kid!
JIMMY LUCAS. Title and Refrain. (1909)

10 Everybody works but father, and he sits around all day,
Feet in front of the fire, smoking his pipe of clay;

Mother takes in washing, so does sister Ann,
Everybody works at our house but my old man.

CHARLES W. MCCLINTOCK, Everybody Works but Father. (1891) One of Lew Dockstader's hits. The song was of English origin, and was revised for American consumption by Jean Havez. Princeton students of the period made it "Henry Clay," the name of their favorite cigar.

11 I've got the time, I've got the place,
Will some one kindly introduce me to the girl?
BALLARD MACDONALD, I've Got the Time, I've Got the Place, But It's Hard to Find the Girl. (1910) Music by S. R. Henry. Sung by Hetty King. See 1431:5.

12 We were comrades, comrades, ever since we were boys,
Sharing each other's sorrows, sharing each other's joys,
Comrades when manhood was dawning, faithful what e'er might betide,
When danger threatened my darling old comrade was there by my side

FELIX MCGLENNON, Comrades. (1887)
Oh! Uncle John! isn't it nice on Broadway?
Oh! Uncle John! here I will remain.
Oh! Uncle John, now that I've seen the Bow'ry,
Life in the country's awful slow,
And I'll never go back again!
FELIX MCGLENNON, Oh! Uncle John. (1895)
Sung by Kittie Gilmore.

Oh! what a difference in the morning!
Don't we regret it at the dawning!
Of cash we find a lack,
And with two eyes awful black,
It's "ten days or ten dollars" in the morning!
FELIX MCGLENNON, Oh! What a Difference in the Morning. (1891) A Lottie Gilson hit.

13 Has anybody here seen Kelly?
Kelly from the Emerald Isle?
WILLIAM J. MCKENZIE, Has Anybody Here Seen

Kelly An American version of an English song, Kelly from the Isle of Man, by C. W. Murphy and Will Letters. Sung by Nora Bayes in The Jolly Bachelors, produced in 1908.

1 Only one girl in the world for me,
Only one girl has my sympathy.

DAVE MARION, Only One Girl in the World for Me. (1895) Sung by Julius P. Witmark.

2 Do not fear, my little darling,
And I will take you home.
Come and sit close beside me,
No more from me you shall roam,
For you were a babe in arms
When your mother left me one day;
Left me at home, deserted, alone,
And took you, my child, away.

EDWARD B. MARKS, The Little Lost Child. (1894) Introduced by Lottie Gilson, the "Little Magnet," it became—incredible as it may seem—one of the smash hits of the '90's.

3 Do they miss me at home, do they miss me?
'Twould be an assurance most dear
To know at this moment some lov'd one
Were saying, "I wish he were here."
CAROLINE ATHERTON MASON, Do They Miss Me At Home? (c. 1850) Music by Mrs. S. M. Grannis.

Little bright eyes, will you miss me,
Will you dream sweet dreams of me?
Come, my darling, sweetly kiss me,
I'll be constant still to thee.

JOHN T. RUTLEDGE, Little Bright Eyes, Will You Miss Me? (c. 1855)

4 "Oh! Fred! tell them to stop!" that was the cry of Maria;
But the more she said "Whoa,"
They said, "Let it go!"
And the swing went a little bit higher.
GEORGE MYN, Oh! Fred! Tell Them to Stop!
One of Tony Pastor's great hits half a century ago.

5 But the cat came back, couldn't stay no longer,
Yes, the cat came back the very next day;
The cat came back, thought he was a goner,
But the cat came back for it wouldn't stay away.

HARRY S. MILLER, The Cat Came Back. (1893)

You can't lose me, Charlie.

HARRY S. MILLER. Title and refrain. (1893)

6 I'm afraid, I'm afraid,
I can't help the feeling that's over me stealing, . . .

Some girls do, then they rue,
So nothing for me to-day.

J. F. MITCHELL, I'm Afraid. (1885) Popularized by Alice Clark.

7 In a cavern, in a canyon,
Excavating for a mine,

Dwelt a miner, forty-niner,
And his daughter, Clementine.
FRANCY MONTROSS, Clementine. (1880)

8 Wild women loved that child,
And he could drive tame women wild,
Sinbad was in bad all the time.
STANLEY MURPHY, Sinbad Was In Bad. (1917)
Music by Harry Carroll.

9 She's my sweetheart, I'm her beau,
She's my Annie, I'm her Joe,
Soon we'll marry, never to part,
Little Annie Rooney is my sweetheart.
MICHAEL NOLAN, Little Annie Rooney. (1890)
Sung by Nolan in the English music-halls, and introduced to America by Annie Hart,
"the Bowery girl," at the old London Theatre,
New York City. Nolan was also the author of Till Whistle and Wait for Katie.

10 There'll be no wedding bells for her,
Past are her days to love;
No one can claim her worthy hand,
Giv'n to the cause above.
GEORGE A. NORTON, No Wedding Bells for Her.
(1898) Music by James W. Casey. This cryptic chorus refers to "a maiden pure and trusting" who "took the veil," after "a pained expression came into her fair young face" when her "idol turned to dust."

Sing me a song of the Sunny South,
One with a sweet refrain;
Sing me a song of Dixie land,
That I may be happy again.
GEORGE A. NORTON, Sing Me a Song of the South. (1899) Music by James W. Casey.
Popularized by Will Thompson, the baritone of Priemrose and Dockstader's minstrels.

11 Take me out to the ball game,
Take me out with the crowd,
Buy me some peanuts and cracker-jack,
I don't care if I never get back.
Let me root, root, root for the home team,
If they don't win it's a shame,
For it's one, two, three strikes you're out,
At the old ball game.

JACK NORWORTH, Take Me Out to the Ball Game. (1908) Music by Albert Von Tilzer.
Popularized by Nora Bayes.

12 There was an old man and he had two sons,
He had, he had,
He lived on a ranch, so the story runs,
He did, he did.

'Twas built on the good old Queen Anne plan,
Right next to the New Jerusalem,
The vicinity, it does not matter a—bit,
Sing tra la la la la la la.

BILL NYE, The Prodigal Son. (1891) Sung by Thomas Q. Seabrook in The Isle of Champagne. Music by Josephine Gro.

13 O Heidelberg, dear Heidelberg, thy sons will ne'er forget,

The golden haze of student days is round about us yet.

Those days of yore will come no more, while through our manly years,

The thought of you, so good and true, will fill our eyes with tears.

FRANK PEXLEY, O Heidelberg (1902) Music by Gustave Luders. The stein song from The Prince of Pilsen.

1 Somewhere, Somewhere, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere,

Land of the true, where we live anew,

Beautiful Isle of Somewhere!

JESSIE BROWN POUNDS, Beautiful Isle of Somewhere. (1901)

2 We'd both been there before, many a time, many a time.

CHARLES E. PROTH. Title and refrain. (1888)

3 I care not for the stars that shine,

I dare not hope to e'er be thine,

I only know I love you,

Love me, and the world is mine.

DAVID REED, JR., Love Me and the World Is Mine. (1906) Music by Ernest R. Ball.

4 Shoo fly, don't bother me, shoo fly, don't bother me,

Shoo fly, don't bother me, I belong to Company G.

BILLY REEVES, Shoo Fly, Don't Bother Me. (1866) Music by Jasper Ross.

5 Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! the boys are marching,

Cheer up, comrades, they will come,

And beneath the starry flag

We shall breathe the air again

Of the free land in our own beloved home.

GEORGE F. ROOT, Tramp! Tramp! Tramp! (1862)

6 Hush, little baby, don't you cry,

You'll be an angel bye and bye.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Hush, Little Baby. (1884)

I don't care if you never come back.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD. Title and refrain of popular song. (1897)

Johnny, get your gun, get your gun today,

Pigeons a-flying all the way,

If you want to get to Heaven in the good ole way,

Johnny, get your gun, get your gun.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Johnny, Get Your Gun. (1886) An echo of an older jingle, "Johnny, get your gun and your sword and your pistol."

Take back your gold, for gold can never buy me;

Take back your bribe, and promise you'll be true;

Give me the love, the love that you'd deny me,

Make me your wife, that's all I ask of you.

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, Take Back Your Gold. (1897) The words are sometimes credited to

Louis W. Pritzkow, a ballad reader with a popular minstrel troupe, who agreed to introduce the song on condition that his name be printed on the music as the lyricist, but Rosenfeld really wrote both words and music. The song was made famous by Imogene Comer, at the Bowdoin Theatre, Boston.

Cash, cash, cash! That's what we're looking for, There's nothing like the good old Rhinol!

MONROE H. ROSENFELD, There's Nothing Like It. (1887) See 1333:16.

With all her faults I love her still,

And even so till Death doth part!

No love like hers, my soul can thrill,

No other love can win my heart!

I love her still! I love her still,

With all her faults I love her still.

8 Where the dear old Shannon's flowing,

Where the three-leaved Shamrock grows,

Where my heart is I am going,

To my little Irish rose.

And the moment that I meet her

With a hug and kiss I'll greet her,

For there's not a colleen sweeter

Where the River Shannon flows.

9 A sweet Tuxedo girl you see,

Queen of swell society,

Fond of fun as fond can be,

When it's on the strict Q. T.

Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-é. [Four times repeated]

HENRY J. SAYERS, Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-é. (1891)

The French accent proved too much for the American moi polloi, and the title is generally given as Ta-ra-ra Boom-de-ay. Sayers is said to have heard the refrain in a negro resort run by "Babe" Connors, in St. Louis, Mo. Used first in a farce comedy called Tuxedo, it was afterwards made a riot in England by Lottie Collins. During a lawsuit over the song, Flora Moore made affidavit that she sang it in the United States in 1884, and others dated it back to 1878. (See SPARTZ, Read 'Em and Weep, p. 163; GOLDENBERG, Tin Pan Alley, p. 113.) "Q. T.," it should perhaps be explained, was slang of the period for quiet.

I'm the man that wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay, It has been sung in every language night and day,

I wrote it in a garret, while out with Booth and Barrett,

I'm the man that wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay.

JAMES THORNTON, I'm the Man That Wrote Ta-ra-ra, Boom-de-ay. (1892) Sung by Thornton in O'Dowd's Neighbors.

2 Oh, promise me that some day you and I
Will take our love together to some sky
Where we can be alone and faith renew,
And find the hollows where those flowers grew
CLEMMENT SCOTT, Oh, Promise Me (1888) Music
by Reginald De Koven De Koven's opera, Robin Hood, opened at Chicago, 9 June, 1890, and immediately after the performance, the famous contralto, Jessie Bartlett Davis, who took the part of Alan-a-Dale, announced that she would never appear in it again, as she considered parts of the score unsuitable. In despair, De Koven chanced to remember a ballad which he had composed some time before to words by Clement Scott, and he ran it over on the piano for Miss Davis, who was delighted with it. When she sang it at the second performance the following night, it brought down the house, and was soon being sung all over the world

The game of a woman's heart;

And the Moth that play'd was a maid, they

(1898) Music by Max S. Witt. Suggested by the second act of Clyde Fitch's play of the same name. Introduced by the famous female baritone Helene Mora, at the Pleasure Palace Theatre, New York City. Fitch afterwards used the melody as incidental music to the play.

My sweetheart's the man in the moon,

I'm going to marry him soon,

'Twould fill me with bliss just to give him one kiss,

But I know that a dozen I never would miss;

I'll go up in a great big balloon,

And see my sweetheart in the moon,

Then behind some dark cloud, where no one is allowed,

I'll make love to the man in the moon.

JAMES THORNTON, My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon. (1892) Popularized by Bonnie Thornton at Tony Pastor's Theatre, New York. Considered very daring in its day.

She may have seen better days,

When she was in her prime;

She may have seen better days,

Once upon a time,

Tho' by the way-side she fell,

She may yet mend her ways.

Some poor old mother is waiting for her

Who has seen better days.

JAMES THORNTON, She May Have Seen Better Days. (1894) W. H. Wisdom sang this in Prinzess & West's minstrels. It was a sure-fire tear producer.

One thought of mother, at home, alone,
Feeble and old and gray;

One of the sweetheart, he left in town,

Happy and young and gay;

One kissed a ringlet of thin gray hair,

One kissed a lock of brown,

Bidding farewell to the Stars and Stripes,

Just as the sun went down.

Not because your face is fair, love, to see,

But your soul, so pure and sweet,

Makes my happiness complete,

Makes me falter at your feet, sweet Marie.

CY WARMAN, Sweet Marie. (1893) Set to music by Ramon Moore, a famous ballad reader, and introduced by him in a musical comedy called Africa, at the Euclid Avenue
Opera House, Cleveland, Ohio.

Baby dear, (sh) listen here, I'm afraid to come home in the dark—

Ev'ry day the papers say a robbery in the

8 Frankie and Albert were lovers, O Lordy, how they could love.
Swore to be true to each other, true as the stars above;
He was her man, and he done her wrong.

UNKNOWN, Frankie and Albert. The original version of Frankie and Johnny, the so-called St. Louis version, relating the story of the murder of Albert, or Allen, Britt, by Frankie Baker, at St. Louis, 15 Oct., 1899. (See the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, 19 Oct., 1899, p. 8, col. 2.) Britt was shot on the 15th and died at the City Hospital on the night of the 18th. When he entered the hospital, he gave his occupation as job worker, and his residence as 212 Targee Street. There are more than 200 versions of this song, which has become an American classic. (See JOHN HUSTON, Frankie and Johnny.)

9 Once on a time there was a wood,
The funniest wood that ever you see,
Oh, the tree in the wood, and the wood in the ground,

I'm a rambling wretch of poverty,
And the son of a gambolier.
UNKNOWN, The Son of a Gambolier. A popular college song of fifty years ago.

4 I blow through here; the music goes 'round and around.

WILLIAM HAROLD (RED) HODGSON, The Music Goes 'Round and Around. (1931) The authorship of this insane "swing" tune, which swept the country for a while, has also been credited to Eddy Farley and Mike Riley, but Hodgson seems to have the prior claim. The song is said to have been suggested by some lines in a joke book for the Ford automobile, published in 1915:

You push the first pedal down,
The wheels go 'round and around.

5 Home, home on the range,
Where the deer and the antelope play;
Where seldom is heard a discouraging word,
And the skies are not cloudy all day.

DR. BREWSTER HIGLEY, The Western Home. Written in 1873, the name of the song was afterwards changed to Home on the Range, and became very popular. It should be noted that it is not a cowboy song, for in this instance "range" has nothing to do with a cattle range or ranch, but denotes a row of townships six miles wide running north and south through a county. Higley was a Pennsylvania physician who had homesteaded near South Center, Kansas, about 1870. The music was written by Dan Kelly, a neighbor at South Center. (For history of the song see Smith County Pioneer, 19 Feb., 1914.) There have been many claimants to its authorship. The Paull-Pioneer Music Corporation has published a version ascribing the music to C. O. (Bob) Swartz, a prospector living near Leadville, Colorado, and the words to a number of his friends, placing the date of composition in 1885, and giving its name as Colorado Home. (See The Story of Colorado Home, by Kenneth S. Clark, which accompanies the music.) A modern version was written by Carson Robison in 1932, and in 1934 Mr. and Mrs. William Goodwin, of Tempe, Arizona, claimed it was an infringement of a song called Arizona Home, written by them in 1903. Both Colorado Home and Arizona Home vary slightly from Dr. Higley's Western Home, but evidently descended from it.

GEORGEY O'HARA, K-K-Katy. (1918) Popular during the World War. There were many parodies, one being:

C-c-c-cootie, horrible cootie,
You're the only b-b-b-bug that I abhor,
When the moon shines over the bunk-house,
I'll scratch my b-b-b-back until it's sore.

Then I shall be able to pull the leg of that chap Mike
Mike He is always trying to do me.

WILLIAM BROWN CHURCHWARD, Blackbirding in the South Pacific, p. 215. (1888) This is the earliest use of this phrase in the sense of deceiving or humbugging which has been discovered. (See New English Dictionary, vi, 381.) But Thomas Hood used it in another sense in the concluding stanza of his The Last Man, written in 1826:

For hanging looks sweet,—but alas! in vain
My desperate fancy begs,—
I must turn my cup of sorrows quite up,
And drink it to the dregs,—
For there is not another man alive,
In the world, to pull my legs!

Hood is referring to the fact that, before the invention of the long drop in executions, the friends of a criminal were permitted to pull his legs in order to shorten his sufferings. (See Notes and Queries, 10th series, vii, 164, 2 March, 1907. There are a number of other communications on the same subject in N. & Q. for 1913.)

Jamie's been drawing your leg (befooling you).
IAN MACLAREN, Beside the Bonny Brier Bush, p. 200. (1895) The phrase is used by Kipling, in his story, The Tomb of His Ancestors. (McClure's Magazine, December, 1897.)

Taxation without representation is tyranny

However the only record of what Otis actually said is some rough notes by John Adams which formed the basis of the first printed account of the speech published in the Massachusetts Spy 29 April, 1773 Fifty years after the event Adams corrected his notes for William Tudor's Life of James Otis, and in a letter to Tudor dated 9 June, 1818 he wrote (Works x. 317) And here he gave reins to his genius, in declamation, invective philippic call it what you will against the tyranny of taxation without representation Tudor used this paragraph in his biography (p. 77), without quotation marks, and adds, 'From the energy with which he urged this position, that taxation without representation is tyranny, it came to be a common maxim in the mouth of everyone' Otis's most recent biographer Samuel Eliot Morrison, says (DAB xiv, 102) 'What Otis said cannot now be recovered with any exactness The phrase, 'Taxation without representation is tyranny' which was not germane to the issue appears only in Adams's final expansion of his notes, made about 1820' (See CANNING, History of the United States, iii, 5, note 1)

It has long been my opinion that we are all educated, whether children, men or women, far more by personal influence than by books and the apparatus of schools If I could be taken back into boyhood today, and had all the libraries and apparatus of a university with ordinary routine professors, offered me on the one hand, and on the other a great luminous rich souled man, such as Dr Hopkins was twenty years ago, in a tent in the woods alone I should say give me Dr Hopkins for my college course rather than any university with only routine professors

Genius is a vagabond Art is a vagabond, Enterprise is a Vagabond Vagabonds have moulded the world into its present shape they have made the houses in which we dwell, the roads on which we ride and drive, the very laws that govern us Respectable people throng in the track of the vagabond as rooks in the track of the ploughshare Nature makes us vagabonds the world makes us respectable

ALEXANDER SMITH, Dreamthorp On Vagabonds

The fresh rough, heathery parts of human nature where the air is freshest, and where the linnets sing is getting encroached upon by cultivated fields Everyone is making himself and herself useful Everyone is producing something Everybody is clever Everybody is a philanthropist I don't like it I love a little eccentricity I respect honest prejudices I admire foolish enthusiasm in a young head better than wise scepticism It is high time it seems to me, that a moral game law was passed for the preservation of the wild and vagrant feelings of human nature

6 Tinker to Evers to Chance

FRANKLIN P. ADAMS, Baseball's Sad Lexicon Perhaps this famous line needs some elucidation Joe Tinker, Johnny Evers and Frank

Chance were members of the Chicago Cubs, the first at shortstop, the second at second base, and the third at first base. With a runner at first base, Tinker would stop a ground hit, toss the ball to Evers on second before the runner could reach it, and Evers would whip the ball to first before the man who hit the ball could get there, making a double play which was frequently repeated.

¹ This is an imitation of a Latin poem, attributed to Bonnefonius:

Semper mundities, semper, Basilissa, decores,
Semper compositas arte recente comas,
Et comptos semper cultus, unguentaque semper,

Omnia sollicita compta videre manu,
Non amo. Neglectum mihi se que comit amice
Se det; et ornatus simplicitate valet.

Vincula ne cures capitis discussa soluti,
Nec ceram in faciem: mel habet illa suum.
Fingere se semper, non est confidere amori;
Quid quod saepe decor, cum prohibetur, adest?

The learned may find these verses among those printed at the end of the Variorum edition of Petronius. Mr. Upton imagines that there are some passages faulty in this poem. I have given it as I find it in the notes of Colomesius on some passages of Quintilian, printed in his Opuscula. He tells us, Hi versus sic legendi sunt, licet alio ubi legemus Niclaus Hemsius ad Ovidium. Tom. i, p. 394.

(Was die Erfahrung aber und die Geschichte lehren, ist dieses, das Völker und Regierungen niemals etwas aus der Geschichte gelernt.)

GEORG WILHELM FRIEDRICH HEGEL, Philosophy of History: Introduction. Sibree, tr. Usually quoted, "The only thing we learn from history is that we learn nothing from history."

Alas! Hegel was right when he said that we learn from history that men never learn anything from history.

BERNARD SHAW, Reddish House: Preface.

⁴ One can resist the invasion of armies, but not the invasion of ideas. (On résiste à l'invasion des armées; on ne résiste pas à l'invasion des idées.)

VICTOR HUGO, Histoire d'un Crime: Conclusion: La Chute. Ch. 10, p. 649. Edition Nationale, Paris, 1893. Vol. 36. This sentence has been variously translated. In the Athenaeum Society edition, vol. xiv, p. 627, it is translated literally, "One resists the invasion of armies; one does not resist the invasion of ideas." William F. Giese, Victor Hugo, p. 295, renders it, "An invasion of armies can be resisted; an invasion of ideas can not be resisted." And on April 15, 1943, The Nation sent out a subscription circular with the sentence, "There is one thing stronger than all the armies in the world; and that is an idea whose time has come," stating that this was the closing entry in Victor Hugo's diary, who died the same night in his sleep. A talk with the circulation manager responsible for the circular elicited the information that, while he remembered using the quotation, he had no idea of its source or where he found it. A search by the Information Division of the New York Public Library disclosed no trace of any publication of Victor Hugo resembling a diary or journal. A similar search by the reference department of the Library of Congress was also unavailing, but the sentence from Histoire d'un Crime given above was found, and is probably the origin of the sentence quoted by The Nation, which has since become familiar in a more picturesque form, "Greater than the tread of mighty armies is an idea whose hour has come." The compiler is indebted to Mr. Charles F. McCombs, Chief Bibliographer of the New York Public Library, and to Mr. David C. Mearns, Director of the Reference Department of the Library of Congress, for this information, as well as for their assistance on many similar occasions. Emerson, in his essay, Civilization, paraphrases Hugo's idea, "Gibraltar may be strong, but ideas are impregnable, and bestow on the hero their invindibility."

⁵ The Greeks Had a Word for It.

ZOE AKINS: Title of play produced in 1929. The word in question was ketaera: "irregular they were, but pleasant, even as those three errant ladies—Folais, Schatze, and Jean—who wander cynically through Miss Akins's play."—New York Times, 12 Oct., 1930, sec. 8, page 4, col. 4. In a bit of dialogue which was deleted before the play was produced, one of the characters comments, "Even the Anglo-Saxons have a word for her sort, and it's usually spelt with a dash."

THE NEW DEAL

⁶ I pledge you, I pledge myself, to a new deal for the American people.

FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, Speech, to the Democratic National Convention which had nominated him for President, Chicago, 3 June, 1932. The phrase, "new deal," was perhaps a combination of Theodore Roosevelt's "square deal" and Woodrow Wilson's "new freedom," but of course it had been in use for many years. CHARLES LEVY, in his novel, Roland Cashel, ch. 13 (1849), has, "Turn about's fair play, my lords and gentlemen. You've had the pack in your hands long enough, and dealt yourselves all the trumps. Now give us the cards for awhile. . . . Hurrah for a new deal. . . . Ireland the stakes, and the players her own stout sons."

The only thing we have to fear is fear itself.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, First Inaugural Address, 4 March, 1933. See 655:15.

In the field of world policy, I would dedicate this nation to the policy of a good neighbor.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, First Inaugural Address, 4 March, 1933.

If I were asked to state the great objective which church and state are both demanding for the sake of every man and woman and child in this country, I would say that that great objective is a more abundant life.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, before the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, 6 Dec., 1933. He used the phrase "A more abundant life" on several subsequent occasions. On 30 March, 1939, in a talk at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, Ala., he said he had tried to give the Southern states "a balanced economy that will spell a higher wage scale, a greater purchasing power, and a more abundant life than they have had in all their history." Again, on 6 Nov., 1941, in an address before the Conference of the International Labor Organization, delivered in the East Room of the White House, he said, in linking world-peace to the attainment of a better world, "If that world is to be one in which peace is to prevail, there must be a more abundant life for the masses of the people of all countries."

To try to increase the security and the happiness of a larger number of people in all occupations of life; . . . to give them assurance that they are not going to starve in their old age; to give honest business a chance to go ahead and make a reasonable profit, and to give everyone a chance to earn a living.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, when asked what were the social objectives of his administration, the so-called New Deal, at a press conference, 7 June, 1935.

Yes, we are on our way back—not by mere chance, not by a turn of the cycle. We are coming back more surely than ever before because we planned it that way; and don't let anybody tell you differently.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, at Charleston, S.C., 23 Oct., 1935. The phrase, "we planned it that way," was used with considerable effect in late 1937 by the President's opponents when the country sank back into depression.

In 1776 we sought freedom from the tyranny of a political autocracy—from the eighteenth century royalists who held special privileges from the crown. . . . Since that struggle, however, man's inventive genius released new forces in our land which reordered the lives of our people. . . . Out of this modern civilization economic royalists carved new dynasties. . . . The royalists of the economic order have conceded that political freedom was the business of the Government, but they have maintained that economic slavery was nobody's business. . . . These economic royalists complain that we seek to overthrow the institutions of America.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech of Acceptance, second nomination for the Presidency, Democratic National Convention, Philadelphia, Pa., 27 June, 1936.

I see one-third of a nation ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Inaugural Address, 20 Jan., 1937.

I am reminded of four definitions: A radical is a man with both feet firmly planted—in the air; a conservative is a man with two perfectly good legs who, however, has never learned to walk; a reactionary is a somnambulist walking backwards; a liberal is a man who uses his legs and his hands at the behest of his head.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 26 Oct., 1939.

The Executive Order I have signed today is a hold-the-line order. To hold the line we cannot tolerate further increases in general wage or salary rates except where clearly necessary to correct sub-standard living conditions.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Executive Order, 8 April, 1943, designed to prevent inflation.

Clear everything with Sidney

F. D. ROOSEVELT (?), Remark, to Robert Hannegan, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, at a conference at Chicago, during the convention which nominated Mr. Roosevelt for a fourth term, June, 1944. The only contest before the convention was over the nomination of vice president, and "Sidney" was Sidney Hillman, head of the Political Action Committee of the Congress of Industrial Organizations (C.I.O.), whose support was very important to Mr. Roosevelt, and who was demanding the nomination of some one satisfactory to his organization. That Mr. Roosevelt actually said, "Clear everything with Sidney" was never admitted either by him or his advisers, but the phrase was used extensively by the Republicans during the ensuing campaign.

The first twelve years are the hardest.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Remark, at a press conference at the White House, 19 Jan., 1945, answering a question as to his reflections on what he had accomplished during his third term as President, just drawing to a close.

For other quotations from Mr. Roosevelt's speeches see Index of Authors (p. 277), and the Index and Concordance.

1

An ever normal granary.

HENRY A. WALLACE, explaining the phrase of the second Agricultural Adjustment Act, passed 16 Feb., 1938, fixing a "parity price" on crops, which the Government maintained.

Modern science . . . has made it technologically possible to see that all the people of the world get enough to eat. Half in fun and half seriously I said the other day to Madame Litvinoff, "The object of this war is to make sure that everybody in the world has the privilege of drinking a quart of milk a day."

HENRY A. WALLACE, Address, before the Free World Association, New York City, 8 May, 1942. Madame Litvinoff was the wife of the Russian Ambassador to the United States.

Much of what Mr. Wallace calls his global thinking is, no matter how you slice it, still "Globaloney."

CLARE BOOTH LUCE, Speech, House of Representatives, 9 Feb., 1943

The times call for clear, lucid thinking rather than Clare Luceish thought.

2

The nine old men.

DREW PEARSON and ROBERT S. ALLEN. Title of book dealing with the Supreme Court. (1936) On 5 Feb., 1937, President Roosevelt sent to Congress a message urging reorganization of the court, upon which he was defeated.

WORLD WAR II

I—Mr. Roosevelt and the War *

3

War is a contagion.

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT, Speech, Chicago, 5 Oct., 1937.

The hand that held the dagger has struck it into the back of its neighbor.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, 10 June, 1940, referring to Mussolini's declaration of war against France.

And while I am talking to you mothers and fathers, I give you one more assurance. I have said this before, but I shall say it again and again and again. Your boys are not going to be sent into any foreign wars.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, Boston, Mass., 30 Oct., 1940. This was a few days before his election for a third term, defeating Wendell Willkie. "He kept us out of war," see 1558:7.

We must be the great arsenal of democracy.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 29 Dec., 1940.

The first is freedom of speech and expression—everywhere in the world. The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way—everywhere in the world. The third is freedom from want . . . everywhere in the world. The fourth is freedom from fear . . . anywhere in the world.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Message to Congress, 6 Jan., 1941. Hailed as the "four freedoms." See BAIRD, Representative American Speeches, 1940-41, p. 185.

Aid [to democracies] will be increased—and yet again increased—until total victory has been won.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, at dinner of White House Correspondents' Association, Washington, 15 March, 1941.

We cannot save freedom with pitchforks and muskets alone after a dictator combination has gained control of the rest of the world.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 4 July, 1941.

We have sought no shooting war with Hitler. We do not seek it now. But neither do we want peace so much that we are willing to pay for it by permitting him to attack our naval and merchant ships while they are on legitimate business.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 11 Sept., 1941, referring to the attack on the U.S. destroyer Greer by a German submarine off Greenland on 4 Sept.

A new peace which will give decent people everywhere a better chance to live and prosper in security and in freedom and in faith.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 27 Oct., 1941.

Yesterday, December 7, 1941—a date that will live in infamy—the United States of America was suddenly and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Message to Congress, 8 Dec., 1941. This was the beginning of the message which asked for a declaration of war.

We are now in this war. We are in it—all the way. . . . We are going to win the war, and we are going to win the peace that follows.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 9 Dec., 1941, the day after the United States had declared war on Japan and the Axis powers.

The militarists of Berlin and Tokyo started this war, but the massed angered forces of common humanity will finish it.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Speech, before joint session of Congress, 6 Jan., 1942.

We fight to retain a great past—and we fight to gain a greater future.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Annual Message to Congress, 7 Jan., 1943.

Soon we and not our enemies will have the offensive; we, not they, will win the final battles; and we, not they, will make the final peace.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 23 Feb., 1942.

This is the toughest war of all time.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Address, 7 Sept., 1942.

There can be no coasting to victory.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Address, to closing session of the New York Herald-Tribune forum, New York City, 17 Nov., 1942.

The first crack in the Axis has come.

F. D. ROOSEVELT, Radio Broadcast, 28 July, 1943, referring to the invasion of Sicily.

II—Mr. Churchill and the War

1 It was for Hitler to say when the war would begin; but it is not for him or for his assistants to say when it will end. It began when he wanted it, but it will end only when we are convinced that he has had enough.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 1 Oct., 1939.

I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears, and sweat.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 13 May, 1940, after being commissioned by the King to form a new government. Where Mr. Churchill got the phrase is uncertain—he may, of course, have coined it, as he did so many others—but in 1611, JOHN DONNE, An Anatomy of the World: The First Anniversary, l. 430, wrote,

"Tis in vain to dew, or mollifie
It with thy teares, or sweat, or blood."

We shall fight on beaches, landing grounds, in fields, in streets and on hills.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 4 June, 1940.

The battle of Britain is about to begin.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 1 July, 1940. The bombing of Britain, or "the blitz," as it was called, from the German "Blitzkrieg," meaning "lightning-war," or war conducted with lightning speed, began in August, 1940, and lasted until the end of the following May, when the Germans intensified their submarine warfare. On 5 March, 1941, A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, referred to this as "The Battle of the Atlantic, now opening."

Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 20 Aug., 1940, referring to the Royal Air Force, which had beat off the German Luftwaffe during the Battle of Britain.

We do not covet anything from any nation except their respect.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Address, broadcast to the French people, 21 Oct., 1940.

The crafty, cold-blooded, black-hearted Italian. WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 9 Feb., 1941, referring to Benito Mussolini. In a speech at the Guildhall, London, 30 June, 1943, Churchill characterized Mussolini as "Their pinchbeck Caesar," and in a radio address of 22 June, 1941, he had referred to Hitler as "This bloodthirsty guttersnipe."

All his usual formalities of perfidy were observed with scrupulous technique.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 21 June, 1941, referring to Hitler's invasion of Russia.

The people of London with one voice would say to Hitler, "You do your worst, and we will do our best."

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, before London County Council, 14 July, 1941.

If we fail, all falls, and if we fall, all will fall together.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 29 July, 1941.

One by one—that was his plan.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, 24 Aug., 1941, referring to Hitler's plan of world conquest. "Divide and conquer was Hitler's strategy."—Newsweek, 12 Jan., 1942, p. 21. See 815:5. In 1942, the Allies set up the opposing strategy of "Unite, encircle, close in."

I am sure that at the end all will be well for us in our island home, all will be better for the world.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, Guildhall, Hull, 7 Nov., 1941.

We shall drive on to the end, and do our duty, win or die. God helping us, we can do no other.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Address, from London, 10 May, 1942. See 1227:5.

When the hour of liberation strikes in Europe, as strike it will, it will also be the hour of retribution.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 8 Sept., 1942.

Our defeats are but stepping-stones to victory, and his victories are only stepping-stones to ruin.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at Edinburgh, 12 Oct., 1942. Referring to Hitler.

Let me, however, make this clear, in case there should be any mistake about it in any quarter. We mean to hold our own. I have not become the King's First Minister in order to preside over the liquidation of the British Empire.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at the Mayor's Day Luncheon, Mansion House, London, 10 Nov., 1942.

The problems of victory are more agreeable than those of defeat, but they are no less difficult.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 11 Nov., 1942, referring to the victorious end of the African campaign.

I believe it was Bismarck who said in the closing years of his life that a dominating fact in the modern world was that the people of Britain and of the United States spoke the same language.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 11 Feb., 1943. Quoted again in his speech at Harvard University, 6 Sept., 1943.

Difficulties mastered are opportunities won. WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 21 March, 1943.

I can imagine that some time next year—but it may well be the year after—we might beat Hitler, by which I mean beat him and his powers of evil into death, dust, and ashes.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Radio Broadcast, 21 March, 1943.

By its sudden collapse, the proud German army has once again proved the truth of the saying, "The Hun is always either at your throat or at your feet."

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, to the U. S. Congress, 19 May, 1943.

It is a poor heart that never rejoices.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, to the U. S. Congress, 19 May, 1943. Quoting an old proverb.

We shall continue to operate on the Italian donkey at both ends, with a carrot and with a stick.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Press Conference, 25 May, 1943.

I quote the words of your great general, Nathan Bedford Forrest, the eminently successful Confederate leader. Asked the secret of his victories, Forrest said, "I git thar fustest with the mostest men."

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Press Conference, 25 May, 1943.

Brighter and solid prospects lie before us.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, June, 1943, after his return from a tour of the North African front.

We seek no profit, we covet no territory or aggrandisement. We expect no reward and we will accept no compromise.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, Guildhall, London, 30 June, 1943.

The time has come for you to decide whether Italians shall die for Mussolini and Hitler, or live for Italy and for civilization.

WINSTON CHURCHILL and F. D. ROOSEVELT, Joint Message, to the Italian people, 16 July, 1943.

The keystone of the Fascist arch has crumbled
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, House of Commons, 27 July, 1943, referring to the overthrow of Mussolini by the Italian Fascists two days earlier.

The price of greatness is responsibility.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, Address, Harvard University, 6 Sept., 1943.

The empires of the future are empires of the mind.
WINSTON CHURCHILL, Speech, at Harvard University, 16 Sept., 1943.

III—General MacArthur and the War

Only those are fit to live who are not afraid to die.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Address, to the Filipino air force, July 31, 1941. See Commander, MacArthur the Magnificent, p. 9

I shall return.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, to his fellow officers as he boarded a small patrol boat to leave the Philippines for Australia, 11 March, 1942.

I came through and I shall return.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Pledge, upon reaching Australia from Batavia, 17 March, 1942. A few days later, on his arrival at Melbourne, MacArthur added, "I shall keep a soldier's faith." See Commander, MacArthur the Magnificent, p. 126.

America's Holy Grail lies on Corregidor.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, Statement, on the first anniversary of the surrender of the fortress in Manila Bay, 8 May, 1943.

The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MACARTHUR, to President Quezon of the Philippines. See Miller, MacArthur, Fighter for Freedom, p. 192.

IV—Miscellaneous

2 Hell, we haven't started to fight. Our artillery hasn't been overrun yet.

GENERAL TERRY ALLEN, at the invasion of Sicily, July, 1943. Reminiscent of John Paul Jones. See 62:7.

3 Hitler has missed the bus.

SIR NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, Speech, 4 April, 1940, referring to Hitler's invasion of Norway.

4 There are no atheists in the fox-holes.

REV. WILLIAM THOMAS CUMMINGS, Sermon, on Batavia, Philippine Islands, March, 1942. Father Cummings was an army chaplain. See Romulo, I Saw the Fall of the Philippines, p. 263.

5 France has lost a battle. But France has not lost the war.

GENERAL CHARLES DEGAULLE, Remark, to Winston Churchill, 17 June, 1940, the day of his arrival in London after the fall of France.

6 The eyes of the world are upon you. The hopes and prayers of liberty-loving people everywhere march with you.

GENERAL DWIGHT EISENHOWER, to his troops as the invasion of Normandy started, 6 June, 1944. American infantrymen had given themselves the name of GI Joes—GI meaning Government Issue, referring to all the articles issued from the Quartermaster's supplies. "GI Turkey" was corned beef, "GI Cocktail" was a dose of salts, and so on.

7 Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition.

LIEUTENANT COMMANDER HOWELL FORGY, navy chaplain, to a chain of men passing ammunition aboard his cruiser at Pearl Harbor, 7 Dec., 1941.

8 Guns will make us powerful; butter will only make us fat.

FIELD MARSHALL HERMANN GÖRING, Radio Broadcast, July, 1935. Perhaps the most famous gun to come out of the war on the American side was the so-called "Bazooka," an anti-tank gun using rocket propulsion, and operated by two men. The most famous vehicle was the "jeep," a quarter-ton pygmy truck, which supposedly got its name from the initials GP (general purpose), painted on the back of the early models. On 22 Feb., 1941, one of these trucks gave an exhibition by climbing the steps of the Capitol at Washington, and when a reporter asked its driver what he called the vehicle, the driver, answered, "Why, I call it a jeep. Everybody does."

9 We have a phrase in English, "straight from the horse's mouth."

JOHN CLARK Grew, Address, delivered in Tokyo, 19 Oct., 1939. This was the opening sentence of the address, which came to be known as "The horse's mouth speech," in which Mr. Grew, the United States Ambassador to Japan indicated clearly the feeling of the American government and people toward the militaristic government of Japan.

There is not sufficient room in the area of the Pacific Ocean for a peaceful America . . . and a swashbuckling Japan.

JOSEPH C. GREW, Radio Broadcast, from Washington, D.C., 30 Aug., 1942.

³ It is better to die on your feet than to live on your knees.

DOLORES IBARRURI, (LA PASIONARIA), Speech, at Paris, 3 Sept., 1936. The phrase has been claimed for Emiliano Zapata (See GUNTHER, Inside Latin America, p. 63), but PINCHON, Zapata the Unconquerable, p. 44, quotes Zapata as saying, "Better a fighting death than a slave's life." The attribution to La Pasionaria is by American Notes and Queries

⁴ In this tragic hour when you too are assailed by the treacherous aggressor, the people of China renew their gratitude to the people of the United States for the understanding and help that have been given us. To our now common battle we offer all we are and all we have to stand with you until the Pacific and the world are freed from the curse of brute force and endless perfidy.

CHIANG KAI-SHEK, Message, to President Roosevelt, 9 Dec., 1941.

America is not only the cauldron of democracy, but the incubator of democratic principles.

MADAME CHIANG KAI-SHEK, Speech, House of Representatives, 18 Feb., 1943.

⁵ A bloody monument to divided responsibility.

COLONEL HUGH J. KNEER, referring to the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, 7 Dec., 1941. See American Mercury, June, 1942, p. 648. ⁷ The fifth column.

GENERAL EMILIO MOLA, Radio Address, when he was leading four columns of troops against Madrid in 1938. The "fifth column" consisted of the Franco sympathizers within the city, and the term came to be applied to all secret sympathizers and supporters of the enemy, engaged in sabotage, espionage and other subversive activities within defense lines. See Webster's New International Dictionary, 1943, p.c. Early in 1942, the term "Sixth column" was applied by Colonel Richard C. Patterson, Jr., New York State Chairman of the Defense Savings Staff, to gossippers and rumor mongers, and was adopted by President Roosevelt in a broadcast on 24 March, 1942. In July, 1942, "Seventh column" was applied to strikers or careless workers in war industries.

It is the old trouble—too late. . . . It is always too late, or too little, or both, and that is the road to disaster.

Alexander gave his British troops a somewhat similar slogan, "Attack, attack, and attack again, even when you are on the defensive." See Newsweek, 31 Aug.,

1942, p. 25. "Back the attack" was selected as the slogan of the fifth War Loan drive, in June, 1944.

² The Grumlin does the same job of sabotage on the home front that the Gremlin does to the airplanes of our pilots fighting the Axis.

SAMUEL RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Speech, at East Texas State Teachers College, 5 Aug., 1943. "Gremlins" was the name to the perverse imps who made things go wrong with airplanes during World War II. The first one was supposed to have been born in a beer bottle in 1923. See Newsweek, 7 Sept., 1942.

³ Bataan has fallen, but the spirit that made it stand—a beacon to all the liberty-loving peoples of the world—cannot fall!

LIEUTENANT NORMAN REYES, Radio Report, of the fall of Bataan, sent from a tunnel in the rock fortress of Corregidor, 9 April, 1942. See ROMULO, I Saw the Fall of the Philippines, p. 302.

⁴ The Seabees are always happy to welcome the Marines.

LIEUTENANT BOB RYAN, greeting to the Marines as they landed at Segi, New Georgia, Sept., 1943. "Seabees" was the nickname of the Construction Battalion of the U. S. Navy. Supposed to land with or just after the Marines, they had somehow managed to land first at Segi.

⁵ God bless America.

IRVING BERLIN. Title of song. First sung in public by Kate Smith in a radio broadcast on Armistice Day, 11 Nov., 1938.

There'll always be an England.

ROSS PARKER and HUGHIE CHARLES. Title of song written in March, 1939, and immensely popular with the English after the outbreak of the war six months later.

We'll hang out the washing on the Siegfried line.

UNKNOWN. Title of popular British song soon after the start of the war, September, 1939.

The last time I saw Paris.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN, II. Title of lyric, from the moving picture, Lady Be Good. (1940) Title of book of reminiscences of Paris by Elliot Paul.

AS Out for America.

JOHN ADAMS. Title of marching song of the U.S.A. Music by Maybaw Lake. (c. 1941)

⁶ Expedience and justice frequently are not even on speaking terms.

ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, Speech, in U. S. Senate, 8 March, 1945, referring to the decision made at Yalta by Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin to cede eastern Poland to Russia.

⁷ Suppose you're a sergeant machine-gunner, and your army is retreating and the enemy advancing. The captain takes you to a machine gun covering the road. "You're to stay here and hold this position," he tells you. "For how long?" you ask. "Never mind," he answers, "just hold it." Then you know you're expendable. In a war anything can be expendable—money or gasoline or equipment or most usually men. They are expending you and that machine gun to get time.

W. L. HEITZ, They Were Expendable, p. 3.

⁸ The people of Germany are just as responsible for Hitler as the people of Chicago are for the Chicago Tribune.

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT, his last words before collapsing at the microphone, 23 Jan., 1943, where he was taking part in a "People's Platform" program on the subject "Is Germany incurable?" He died a few hours later.

⁹ China incident.

The Japanese-coined phrase for the "incident" which started the attack upon China on the night of 7 July, 1937, when the Japanese held large-scale military maneuvers near Lukou-chiao and alleged afterwards that one of their men was missing. See China Handbook, 1937-1943, p. 350.

¹⁰ South America becomes very quivering conscious.

UNKNOWN, Time, 24 May, 1940, p. 40. A new word for a traitor or collaborator with the enemy, deriving from Vidkun Quisling, head of the Norwegian Nazi party, who was appointed head of the Nazi-sponsored government after the German invasion of Norway in April, 1940. He was condemned to death as a traitor and executed in September, 1945. All of the Allied governments had their Quislings. The outstanding French one was Pierre Laval, executed in November, 1945. The most famous British one was "Lord Haw Haw," the microphone name of William Joyce, an American who had gone to Germany on a British passport and began broadcasting German propaganda from Berlin soon after the start of the war. He was captured by the British shortly after the German surrender and executed in London, 3 January, 1946. The District of Columbia Grand Jury indicted a number of Americans for treason, 26 July, 1943, including Fred W. Kaelbach, whose mike name was "Lord Hee Haw";

Douglas Chandler, one time Baltimore columnist, whose mike name was "Paul Revere", Edward L. Delaney, known as E. D. Ward, and Ezra Pound, the well known poet, all of them for broadcasting enemy propaganda, Pound from Italy, and the others from Germany. They were all taken into custody at the close of the war, but none had been brought to trial at the time this was written, January 2, 1946

I said to a man who stood at the gate of the year
Give me a light that I may tread safely into the unknown " And he replied, "Go out into the darkness and put your hand into the hand of God. That shall be to you better than a light and safer than a known way "

MINNIE L. HASKINS, The Desert Introduction (c. 1920) Quoted by King George VI, of England, Christmas Day broadcast, 1939 The Desert was a small volume of verse published privately by its author, formerly a teacher in the Social Science Department of the London School of Economics. See Time magazine, 8 Jan., 1940, p. 22

INDEX OF AUTHORS

SUGGESTIONS FOR USING THE INDEX OF AUTHORS

The INDEX OF AUTHORS includes the name of every person quoted in this book, together with the dates of his birth and death, and a brief characterization giving his nationality and occupation. (A blank death date indicates that the person was still living May 1, 1937, when this index was completed.) Where these biographical data are missing or incomplete, the editor will greatly appreciate information which will enable him to fill them in.

If the number of quotations from an author's works does not exceed 150, the pages on which the quotations appear are also given. If the number is in excess of 150, the name is preceded by a star. There are a few exceptions to this, the quotations from W. S. Gilbert, Thomas Jefferson, Rudyard Kipling, Bernard Shaw, Robert Louis Stevenson, H. D. Thoreau, Mark Twain, Voltaire, Walt Whitman, and Oscar Wilde being listed in full because of the special interest in their work. It was felt that to list the quotations from all authors would encumber the index unreasonably; those from such writers as Shakespeare and Pope, for example, number perhaps a thousand, and the figures listing them would occupy nearly four columns of space.

There are four ways in which the index may be used to advantage:

- (1) To check the quotations from any author's work.
- (2) To find a quotation where the author is remembered, but the quotation itself only indistinctly. For example, if one is searching for a quotation by Walt Whitman and all that is remembered is that it has something to do with the sea, one need only look up the quotations by Whitman between pages 1771 and 1782.
- (3) To ascertain what any author has to say on any given subject. If one wishes to know what Oscar Wilde has to say about women, for instance, the Wilde quotations should be consulted for pages 2178-2208.
- (4) To find a quotation whose supposed key-word cannot be turned up in the CONCORDANCE, but whose author is known. Key-words are sometimes wrongly remembered, or perhaps the editor has chosen some other word in the quotation as the most important. Again it is only necessary to check the quotations by the author in question, in the section in which the desired quotation would naturally fall.

The following abbreviations are used: b. = born; c. = circa, about; d. = died; fl. = flourished, indicating an author's period when his exact dates are not known; pseud. = pseudonym.

INDEX AND CONCORDANCE

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE USE OF THE CONCORDANCE

THE CONCORDANCE is a word index to all the quotations in the book, grouped alphabetically by leading words and phrases, with a reference not only to the page on which the quotation may be found, but also to its number on the page, so that it may be turned to instantly. The first entry in the index on the following page is 39 13, which means the thirteenth quotation on page 39. Identifying words and phrases are generously given, in order that a quotation which is not exactly remembered may be traced through any one of a number of channels.

Let us suppose that the phrase which is being sought is, "The conscious water saw its God, and blushed." Perhaps all that is remembered of it is that it has something to do with water seeing God, or with water blushing. In either case it would be evident that the place to look for it is under "Water." It could of course be looked for in the text under that subject, where it would be found (2124 14), with a cross reference to "Miracle," where the whole quotation, together with several variations, has been placed because it has to do with the miracle of turning water into wine. But the easier way would be to look under "Water" in the CONCORDANCE, where two entries referring to it will be found, "conscious water saw its God," and "saw its God and blushed," both referring directly to the main quotation, 1315 14. And it will also be found under "Blushed" ("saw its God and b") in case any one should happen to look there first.

So with every quotation in the book. The word selected for the index entry is always the noun—if there is a noun—which is the subject of the sentence in the above case "Water." But many others are thrown in for good measure as "Blushed" is in this instance so that the quotation may be found even if the principal noun is incorrectly remembered. "Chip of the old block" for example, is entered under both "Chip" and "Block." Where there is no noun, the principal adjective or verb is used. Absent one from another will be found under "Absent." "Who excuses accuses" will be found under both "Accuses" and "Excuses." An effort has also been made to include all unusual words and phrases by which a quotation might stand out in the memory. "A biscuit or two with Brie" is naturally indexed under "Biscuit," but it will be found also under "Brie."

The only exception to this detailed indexing is where the subject is a very short one. The black letter lines in the CONCORDANCE indicate subject headings in the body of the book, and where the subject runs less than a column of text, such as "Abstinence," the quotations under this subject carrying this word are not indexed separately unless they are unusually important, and the reader should turn at once to the subject itself and run through the entries under it—a matter of a moment. Where the same key word occurs in quotations under other headings it is, of course indexed. Thus under the black letter subject heading "Abstinence" in the CONCORDANCE will be found two entries from quotations on other pages. This system was adopted in order to keep the CONCORDANCE free from unnecessary entries and to hold it within manageable proportions.

Some niceties of the alphabetical arrangement should perhaps be explained. Under each subject the singular noun comes first ("God," for example), then the singular possessive ("God's"), then the hyphenated compounds ("God-like"), then the plural ("Gods"), and finally the plural possessive ("Gods'"). Proper nouns precede common nouns. All foreign language quotations follow the English ones, even if the key word is identical, so that the French entries beginning with "Art" for instance will be found immediately after the English ones beginning with the same word. It should also be remembered that a word is sometimes spelled in different ways, as "blessed" and "blest." Cross-references call attention to this, and both spellings should be consulted as the text follows the style used by the author.

All entries necessarily are very brief, but an effort has been made to give sufficient context to enable the reader to identify the quotation readily. It should be pointed out, however, that the mind of the reader will not always run exactly in accord with the mind of the indexer, and the phrase which springs to the reader's memory may not be the exact one which the indexer has chosen, in which case a little perseverance may be necessary to turn up the quotation desired.

No one can get the full benefit of this book without understanding thoroughly the use of the CONCORDANCE for it is the key to its contents, and if the reader will spend a little time familiarizing himself with the suggestions given above he will find the book much more useful and satisfactory than it could otherwise be.
